

Carter outlines energy-saving plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter asked a hushed Congress Wednesday night to enact a national energy policy that raises prices and taxes for energy and automobiles to encourage conservation of dwindling resources.

"With the exception of preventing war, this is the greatest challenge our country will face during our lifetimes," Carter told a joint session of the Senate and House in a nationally broadcast address.

CARTER told the legislators, already divided by allegiance to different regions and interests, that he has learned why a comprehensive energy policy has not already been developed.

"It is a thankless job," Carter said, "but it is our job, and I believe we have a fair, well balanced and effective plan to present to you."

He urged enactment of legislation that would tax gas-guzzling autos anywhere from $449 for 1978 low-mileage models up to $2,488 for 1985.

And he asked the lawmakers to approve a plan that would add about 7 cents a gallon to the cost of gasoline, fuel oil and other petroleum products by 1980 through a series of taxes on crude oil.

Carter's program threatened further gasoline taxes starting at five cents a gallon in 1979 and rising as high as 50 cents a gallon if United States gasoline consumption is not held down.

United States gasoline prices now are about 60 cents a gallon for regular, including 4 cents of federal tax. By comparison, the price in Great Britain is about $1.60 a gallon.

"I don't expect much applause," Carter said near the start of his 31-minute speech. And he didn't get much after receiving a warm round when he entered the House chamber where members of Congress, diplomats and officials awaited him and where his family looked on.

THE PRESIDENT was almost 20 minutes into his speech when his statement that "immediate and total decontrol of domestic oil and gas prices would be disastrous" brought the first round of handclapping. The next came when he said producers should not be allowed windfall profits.

In all, his speech was interrupted eight times by applause.

The political difficulties Carter will face in having his proposals embodied in law showed clearly in the first congressional reaction.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr. said Carter knows "this is his first major fight." Other disagreements with members of Congress, O'Neill said, "were mere skirmishes. This is a battle."

O'Neill said the gasoline tax would be the hardest to get through Congress and he personally did not see how it would work to conserve gasoline.

The two committee chairmen who would handle any tax components of the energy package commented guardedly.

REP. AL ULLMAN, (D-Ore.), of the House Ways and Means Committee, praised Carter for "a tough direct approach that leaves no doubt about his personal commitment," but wondered whether "people will recognize the dangers of delay and will respond short of a clearcut crisis."

And Ullman said "parts of the plan no doubt will be revised in the interest of workability and equity."

Sen. Russell Long, (D-La.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said Carter should be admired for constructive recommendations "and Congress ought to cooperate with him to the extent it can. His recommendations will be considered."

Sorority reactions to race issue differ

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth of a five-part series examining interracial relations at K-State.

By VELINA HOUSTON
Features Editor

Greeks—Alpha Beta Gamma and so on—the sororities at K-State are part of this campus' social distinction.

But this social distinction is broken down even more: it divides black and white, with few visitors between camps.

The Kansas Board of Regents policy on organization membership prohibits discrimination "on the basis of sex, race, religious faith or national origin within the institutions under its jurisdiction."

The policy further states that "all fraternal and campus-related organizations shall follow this policy in the selection of their members."

K-STATE'S white sororities have never had a black member, although sister chapters in other parts of the United States have. Of the two black sororities on campus, Delta Sigma Theta has a Caucasian member and the other, Alpha Kappa Alpha, is currently pledging a white student.

Earlier this semester at the University of Kansas a half-black, half-Japanese woman was denied entrance to a white sorority, allegedly for reasons of race.

Does racial discrimination exist in K-State's sorority system?

Most white sorority actives say no. Women in black sororities say yes and some white women who are no longer active in their sororities or have de-pledged voice the same opinion.

"I never thought about pledging a white sorority," said Becky Leon, sophomore in social work and the sole non-black member of Delta Sigma Theta. "I don't think I'd be accepted."

"Not just at KU, but K-State's white sororities would discriminate against a black going through rush, too."

"People I've talked to who are in white sororities tell me that a black woman has only slim chances of getting in just because of the color of her skin," she said.

The slides Panhellenic Council uses in its summer orientation program have only pictures of white girls, Leon said.

"That gives incoming freshmen women a one-sided view of K-State sororities," said Cheryl McAfee, junior in architecture and member of Alpha Kappa Alpha.

"Blacks and other minority women will think that sororities are supposed to be all whites," McAfee said.

LEON said she didn't encounter any prejudice from black women when she was pledging Delta Sigma Theta.

"A couple of girls on my dorm floor would always say 'Oh, look at Becky. She's too good for us now. She's all black now.' It didn't bother me," Leon said.

McAfee said she was glad the incident at KU happened because it caused a state-wide reaction and made people aware that racial discrimination might still exist.

Now that the issue of discrimination is in the media and in the public eye, McAfee said, white sororities will have to "play open-minded" and rush black women.

"They (white sororities) go through a front for the public, but they like the way they are and they really don't want black members."

Tribunal to decide on Grisolia's fate

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Student Tribunal will decide today whether impeached Student Senator Bill Grisolia will be removed from office.

Grisolia, arts and sciences senator, was impeached by senate two weeks ago after having four unexcused absences this semester.

"Bill (Grisolia) will be charged with non-feasance—not performing an act which he should have performed," Paul Edgerly, student attorney general said. "Bill has missed five meetings so far this semester and he was released from finance committee for missing meetings."

The proceedings will be at 4:30 p.m. in the Student Governing Services (SGS) office in the Union. Edgerly said the meeting will probably be open but Grisolia has the right to ask for a closed meeting.

EDGERLY SAID the procedure is established in the student government constitution.

"First the charges will be made against Bill, then Bill will enter a plea. As prosecuting attorney, I will enter pertinent information and call witnesses, I could question Bill but I probably won't have to.

"Bill will enter any information or witnesses, then the tribunal will ask questions. Finally there will be concluding statements from first me, then Bill," Edgerly said. The tribunal consists of five students and two faculty members.

Max Knopp, senate finance committee chairman, said Grisolia was replaced on the finance committee because of "trouble with attendance."

"We had several meetings for preliminary allocation hearings where we set up meeting times with everyone, and then Bill wouldn't show up," Knopp said.

"We felt that these allocation hearings were serious enough that we wanted all of the members present."

KNOPP SAID Grisolia missed three of the five meetings and was late to another.

Impeachment of Grisolia was originally proposed at the March 31 senate meeting because of three unexcused absences. The measure was defeated because some senators felt Grisolia, who was absent, should be present to refute charges against him.

Grisolia spoke in favor of the impeachment bill at the April 7 meeting stating he wanted to go before tribunal to clear his record.

First quarter's estimate shows recovery of nation's economy

WASHINGTON (AP)—Most of the recent indicators show the nation's economy is moving ahead with enough strength to virtually ignore the crippling effects brought on by the severest winter in decades.

The latest figures to signal a vigorous recovery that some economists said has been gathering momentum since November came Wednesday when the government released the first quarter estimate of the Gross National Product (GNP).

THOSE figures showed the GNP—the total value of the nation's goods and services—was up to an annual rate of 5.2 per cent, "a stronger performance than generally was anticipated a month ago," said Courtenay Slater, chief economist for the Department of Commerce.

Earlier this month, indicators for consumer credit, wages and prices, personal income and housing starts all showed gains. In addition, the unemployment rate dropped in March to 7.3 per cent from February's 7.5 per cent.

OKLAHOMA CITY—The Oklahoma House Wednesday overwhelmingly approved a bill to allow the state to execute its condemned criminals by drug injection, but not before attacking an amendment that calls for electrocutions to continue until the drug method is ruled valid by the courts.

The measure provides that Oklahomans convicted of capital crimes would be put to death through a continuous, intravenous administration of a lethal quantity of an ultra-short acting barbiturate.

The vote came after defeat of several amendments aimed at permitting additional methods of execution, including by hanging, firing squad, the electric chair and gas chamber.

TOPEKA—Edward Johnson, United States attorney for Kansas, said Wednesday his office has not decided whether to contest the state of Kansas' seizure of a plane loaded with marijuana which was forced to land near Jetmore earlier this month.

Johnson said he received a letter from Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider, which said the Attorney General understood the federal government wouldn't contest the state seizure.

"I would anticipate that we would not contest state seizure of the plane," Johnson said. "We have not at this point acquiesced in the state's seizure but we are exploring that possibility."

ATLANTA—The lost roster of an airborne unit exposed to an atomic bomb test in Nevada in 1957 could be the key to an important study of leukemia, the national Center for Disease Control said Wednesday.

So far, two former members of the 504th Airborne Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division, Ft. Bragg, N.C., are suffering from acute leukemia, a cancer that attacks the white blood cells, the CDC said.

There could be others, some of whom may already be dead, a spokesman said.

Dr. Glyn Caldwell, deputy chief of the cancer branch of the CDC, wants to identify the other members of the unit—about 250 men—and is asking them to come forward.

WASHINGTON—Richard Nixon's lawyer told the Supreme Court on Wednesday that Nixon's constitutional right to privacy clearly is trampled by government seizure of the former president's tapes and papers and the prospect of archivists rummaging through them.

"What we are talking about is a man's life, five and a half years as president," Herbert Miller told the court. "We are talking about a gross violation of the Fourth Amendment."

And, he warned, if a 1974 law directing the seizure is allowed to stand, not even the justices' own documents would be safe if Congress should choose to take them.

The Supreme Court must decide whether Congress had the constitutional right to pass the law which, for the first time in the 200 years of nationhood, deprived a president of his papers.

WASHINGTON—President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire, a fancier of the finest French wines, has decided his troops' C-rations would go better with Coke.

"You can't expect a soldier to fight on a Coke-less stomach," said one State Department official.

A second, acknowledging that $60,000 worth of Coca-Cola probably will be on its way to the war-stricken African country, commented: "They have to drink something and the water isn't too good."

Both officials stressed it's a commercial deal between Zaire and an American supplier and is not financed by the U.S. government in any way.

THE DEAN OF BEER'S QUICKIE QUIZ.

Q: The best water for beer comes from:

- Big Duck Mountain.
- Underground from Tijuana.
- A small store in Macon, Ga.
- None of the above.

A: (d) The way some beer drinkers talk about water, you'd think Alice found it in Wonderland.

Not that water isn't important to a beer's taste. It is. Very important.

But the fact is, virtually all brewers filter and further purify their brewing water.

And Schlitz doesn't stop there. They put their water through what they believe is the most sophisticated purifying process of any brewer in the world.

So when they're through, it's purer than the purest springwater.

THERE'S JUST ONE WORD FOR BEER.

AND YOU KNOW IT.

Commission should become leader

The new Manhattan City Commission sworn in Tuesday faces the challenge of becoming a leader in the area of city expansion.

Unfortunately, the new commission may follow in the steps of its predecessors.

After being sworn in, the new commission promptly agreed that the southeast expansion of Manhattan would be the biggest issue of this year.

THE COMMISSION then postponed considering the matter until August so more studies on the matter could be conducted.

In the past, the city commissioners have based annexation decisions on the wishes of developers.

The commission should govern the developers and not follow the developers' wishes.

The last commission criticized itself as being passive rather than active in formulating policy.

THE CURRENT commission overlooked the criticism of the previous one and decided since there was no overall growth plan for the city, the commission should wait for a plan to be completed.

With that philosophy in its collective pocket the commission continues to annex and spot zone bits of land on the city's periphery on a piecemeal basis.

The annexations of small bits of land on the western edge of town, while the commission proclaims it can do nothing because it lacks a plan severely impugns the commission's reputation.

The new commission should make itself a leader and not a pawn of the land developers' wishes. The commission should do what's best for the city and govern the developers.

Carter's energy plan poor

It was a cold, hard and expensive winter for the American public.

For the first time people woke up and realized the nation and the world have a serious energy problem. Many who disbelieved during the Nixon years converted last winter as they cuddled around the fireplace to read the electric bill.

SOME, who still think the energy crisis was invented by some highly imaginative oil leaders, will bite the dust when the price of gasoline rises past the 80 cents per gallon mark, the cost of heating and cooling their homes soars and when they can't give away their gas hog cars.

All of this because of President Jimmy Carter and his new energy package.

Like any other new plan, Carter's package has some really good points and some very bad ones. However, the bad points outweigh the good ones to the extent that his "I'm one of you" approach won't protect him from the wrath of the masses of people his energy program will hurt financially.

THE GOOD points:

—Carter realizes if for some reason the nation's oil supply runs too low there are no effective back-up resources to supply the needed energy. Carter wants the public to suffer a small sacrifice now instead of extreme hardship later. He wants to reduce the nation's oil consumption and his way of doing that is to place a heavy tax on the energy.

—The gasoline tax, which would probably start out at five cents and gradually increase, will increase federal revenue and may increase the price so much that people will see gasoline as a luxury that's too expensive to waste on just driving around on Sunday's and other nonsensical trips. It will also increase the use of public transportation and other means of travelling, like walking, for short distances.

—Carter wants to put a stiff tax on new cars that don't give good gas mileage. This will increase the price of the small cars, but the price of such cars will jump with or without this tax.

THE BAD points:

—Carter wants to offer a tax break for home owners and businessmen who insulate buildings and install more efficient lighting and heating. Like so many government programs, this will give the rich an advantage over the poor.

The poor, who couldn't afford to insulate last year, won't be able to next year and the higher cost would break them. Carter would be smarter to give rebates to those that don't have adequate insulation for the purpose of paying for insulation that will in the long run save money by reducing the heating and cooling bill.

—Carter wants coal. He says it is the best way to conserve oil and natural gas. Coal is an abundant resource, but to increase its use means dirtier air and more land desecrated by strip mining.

—The plan calls for increasing the use of nuclear power. The United States now has 62 nuclear power plants and this would grow to 500 by 1980. Carter must realize that nuclear power is one source everyone wants as long as the reactor isn't nearby. And like oil, it has its limitations.

—Carter fails to tax such wasteful items such as brightly-lit advertising signs, billboards.

Carter's energy plan has good points and bad points. I hope Congress will be sensible enough to keep the good points and amend the bad.

'Tales' censorship inexcusable

Editor,

Re: The censoring of the film "Immoral Tales" by the Union Program Council Kaleidoscope Committee.

Censorship at any time is bad, but when it happens in a supposedly "free" academic community, it is inexcusable.

The purpose of a university is to put varied ideas and experiences before its students, faculty and others in the community precisely so that they may form their own attitudes and opinions about them.

THE ASSUMPTIONS behind such a commitment are at least two: First, wider recognition of whatever may turn out to be the true or more just position is fostered by such intellectual (and yes, emotional) ferment. Secondly, and even more importantly, the very process of making up one's own mind on the basis of one's own experience of controversial (as distinct from cut-and-dried) matters is what everyone here is here to refine.

Hence, the University should seek to afford, to all who will accept, every opportunity to exercise this activity of mind. We are here, in other words, not merely to be made acquainted with platitudes generally acknowledged to be harmless and with experiences whose "wholesomeness" resides in their conformity to these, but to learn by practice, how to think for ourselves.

THE KALEIDOSCOPE Committee maintains that it is not engaging in censorship but acting in accordance with its special purpose. According to Dana Elmer, the film did not meet the committee's standards because it "lacked artistic value" and "there was no socially redeeming value."

But we submit that if this was the committee's basis, it has either misconceived or betrayed its mission on this campus. The purpose of the Kaleidoscope series is to bring to the campus, films of some repute so that students and others can judge the films for themselves.

It was presumably out of respect for the considerable acclaim the movie has received that the committee decided to bring in the film in the first place—so that members of the University community could have the experience of, among other things, determining for themselves whether that reputation was deserved.

IN ORDERING the movie on this basis, the committee did its duty. In reserving solely to themselves the opportunity to test its judgment upon it—in depriving that is, the rest of us the opportunity to try our critical wits upon it—it has lost sight of its duty to the University community at large.

Faced with the critical reputation of this film, with their own revulsion toward it and/or its inability to comprehend (or appreciate) its supposed merits, the committee ought to have submitted the film, the general reputation of the film and the committee's own judgment of both to the judgment of the University community.

Rape myths, not facts prevail

Editor,

I'm writing in reference to David Pippin's letter "Compromising Positions Dangerous" in the April 13 Collegian.

He stated that "one measure which has tremendous rape deferral effect is for the victims to realize that there are perverts in the world and not to present themselves as open targets for their voracious appetites."

The myth that only perverts rape unfortunately still prevails, at least in the mind of Pippin. I would like to point out according to Professor Menachem Amir's study of 646 rape cases in Philadelphia, Penn. "Patterns in Forcible Rape," men who rape are not necessarily abnormal.

In fact, Amir writes; "Studies indicate that sex offenders do not constitute a unique or psychopathological type; nor are they as a group invariably more disturbed than the control groups to which they are compared."

ALSO, according to Amir's study of forcible rape the men who had been convicted of rape were found to have a normal sexual personality, tending to be different from the normal, well-adjusted male only in having a greater tendency to express violence and rage.

As for the preventive measures, Pippin suggested walking in groups at night, checking out people and places beforehand and getting in earlier on some evenings. I wonder how readily he would accept following those measures?

Really, how paranoid must a woman get? If she were to try and follow all the suggestions given out, I'm sure she would be considered a real basket case.

THE OTHER concern of Pippin's was how the sunbathing Putnam Hall girls were "exciting and encouraging" would-be rapists by "mooning" to male students passing by in cars. If seeing the female anatomy induces raping tendencies as Pippin implies, I wonder what two-year-old girls and 83-year-old victims do to entice their rapists?

Linda Reinshagen, Victim Services Coordinator of Rape Crisis Inc., in Chicago, states; "Perhaps the most damaging myth of all is that rape is motivated by sexual needs. Psychologists, psychiatrists and rapists themselves admit it is the desire to dominate and humiliate that causes rape. Sex is the only method by which achieves these goals."

She goes on to say; "It is about time the myths about rape were debunked. They are damaging to the victims, who are humiliated and brutalized, then told they probably enjoyed it or wanted it."

These myths are an indictment against a society that allows half of its population to live in constant fear of attack and continues to place the blame on the victims."

Bilingual students topic of conference

The needs of bilingual children in Kansas public schools will be designated at the second annual Kansas State Conference on bilingual education Friday and Saturday at K-State.

The conference will be hosted by the K-State Bilingual Multicultural Teacher Education Project.

PARENTS, educators and general public attending the conference will identify, justify and set priorities for the educational needs of bilingual children, said Robert Rosales, instructor with the bilingual project.

The proposal will be presented at the regional conference in Kansas City, Mo., Rosales said.

"At the regional conference they will modify our priorities and then present them to the legislature in Topeka for legislative action," he said.

The federally-funded project, identified as Bilingual Title 7, went into initial planning at K-State in 1975.

"The project is divided into two components, the parent-community program and the instruction-training program," said Martha Chevz, graduate student in curriculum instruction. "The conference will centered around the parent-community program."

THE CONFERENCE will try to provide teachers and community representatives with information about bilingual education, to determine the need for the project in Kansas and to present the Kansas legislature with a bilingual act, Chevz said.

It is difficult for children to learn when they are placed in a strictly English speaking school, Chevz said.

"They do not know grammar in their own language, let alone grammar in English," she said.

If the regional conference is successful in submitting the legislation, the children will be able to develop their native languages as well as English, Rosales said.

"This will be a working conference, not informational like last year's conference. Provisions must be made for these children," Rosales said. "We want the child to keep his own native language."

Tax credit veto to be future issue

WICHITA (AP)—Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider told an interviewer Wednesday he believes Gov. Robert Bennett's veto of the state income tax exemption bill would be an issue in the 1978 political campaign.

Schneider has been suggested by some Democrats as a possible party candidate for governor in the next election. Bennett, a Republican, is expected to seek re-election.

The bill would have raised the tax exemption from $600 to $750 per person.

Student teacher back at K-State; says British kids like discipline

By JAMIE HOVERDER

Collegian Reporter

A K-State education student's untypical student teaching this semester was done in a typically English school.

Sara Weddle, senior in elementary education, recently returned from her 11-week student teaching block at Parkland County Junior School in Leicester, England, and is the first K-State education major to do her student teaching abroad.

"The beauty of this program is that Sara was in the mainstream of their society," said Vernon Kurtz, K-State professor in curriculum and instruction. "There is no reason why other students who have finished their requirements can't go to England."

Kurtz helped Weddle with the arrangements for her overseas teaching. He said he had taken groups of teachers to England before and became acquainted with one of the headmasters, Englands' equivalent to an American principal.

"We became acquainted and talked about K-State students teaching in England. He was very enthusiastic about the idea," Kurtz said.

WEDDLE SAID the experience was a valuable addition to her education. Some education majors get discouraged when they do their student teaching, she said, but being in England has made teaching more attractive to her.

There are differences between American and English schools. For instance, Weddle said discipline is stressed in English schools and the children seem to like it. She said the children are courteous and the parents give the schools ample support.

English students are also required to write more than American students and neatness is essential in the classroom, she said. The English teachers don't have the teaching materials available to American teachers and their lesson plans are made without the help of educational aides.

"You do really have to work; you are pretty much on your own," Weddle said.

LUNCHTIME IS handled differently in the English schools. The students eat family-style rather than cafeteria-style.

"There are eight children to a table and the children find out what you want to eat and they do the serving themselves," she said. "They stand up until everyone is served."

Religion is still a part of early-morning exercises, unlike most American schools. The school children meet in an assembly every morning and say prayers and sing hymns chosen by the headmaster.

Weddle and Kurtz agreed the overseas teaching experience was not expensive. Her living expenses were lower than when in a K-State residence hall. The greatest expense was the round-trip flight fee.

Kurtz said the expense might be keeping others from doing their teaching abroad, but said other students are inquiring about the program.

Rainsberger looks at new, old faces

When discussing K-State's 1977 spring football drills, Ellis Rainsberger quickly mentions some new names and some old names at new positions.

Milt Munn, Mack Green, Malo Eteuni, Ray Butler, L.J. Brown and Harvey Love are among the new ones drawing Rainsberger's praise. Mike Osborn and Eddy Whitley, old faces, also were singled out for their performances at new positions.

Munn and Love are a pair of wide receivers from junior colleges, while Green and Butler brought their running talents from the juco ranks also. Same for Eteuni, a 6-3, 270-pound offensive lineman. Brown was a junior varsity player for the Wildcats last year.

"We definitely added some speed among our skilled people," Rainsberger said, "particularly at running back in Green, Butler and Brown."

Eteuni is one of four offensive linemen who have been impressive early, Rainsberger said. He also commended guard Floyd Dorsey, center Dexter Bussey and tackle Phil Noel.

The 6-4, 212-pound Whitley, a slot-back last year as a freshman, is locked in a battle with returning regular Paul Coffman and sophomore Jim Miller for the tight end berth.

Osborn, a defensive tackle last campaign and Keith Nelms have sparked at defensive end, while much of Rainsberger's attention has been focused on the defensive secondary.

The Wildcats will have their second scrimmage at 2 p.m. Saturday in KSU stadium.

Royals increase security; all liquid containers banned

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The Kansas City Royals, shocked by the rowdiness and violence that marred their first two home games, have beefed up stadium security and banned all liquid containers.

Since last Monday night, fans with bottles, cans, jugs, coolers and other containers have been denied admittance unless the containers were left outside.

"They serve as possible projectiles that can be thrown onto the field and endanger the safety of fans and players," said Herk Robinson, the vice president for operations.

"And we have found the majority of them contain liquor—and it's against the law to bring liquor onto the premises of any business that holds a liquor license, anyway."

"Mainly, the increased security is not because we have severe problems," he said. "They're there for people's peace of mind. The additional security officers will also be available to assist at the gates to check the liquid containers."

Robinson said a few disgruntled fans had accused the Royals of trying to force them to patronize the stadium beer concessions.

"This, of course, is ridiculous," he said. "We're not trying anything of the sort. It's just that we have a nice place here and we intend to keep it that way."

Football team not on trial

Since the reported rape in the Athletic Residence Hall, every resident of that hall has become suspect.

Many people think it's plausible to hold the entire football team

Sports

Five or more men allegedly raped a woman. But five men are not representative of the football program.

SO WHY are we holding the entire football program responsible for the possible actions of five or six?

Nowhere has it been said the entire football team was accused of raping the victim.

Let's see this through an analogy: In the fall of 1975, several women were raped on campus by a man who was described as a blond. There were more patrols on campus to prevent this man from attacking other women, but no one held every blond man on campus responsible.

Is this too big a group? Maybe. But there are 200 residents and about 100 football players in the A-dorm who are expected to take the heat because of the alleged actions of five men, who happen to also be football players.

That's unfair to the other men who reside in the A-dorm, just as it would be unfair to hold every man in any other residence hall responsible had the same thing happened elsewhere.

I am by no means condoning the actions of the men who allegedly committed the crime. But let's put this in perspective and not put an entire team on trial.

football tickets is understandable. It would hit the problem at home: by withholding support for the football program, those who could do something about the alleged rape might be forced to act upon it.

But how can the athletic department act upon allegations? Picture this: A woman says she was raped. She tells the authorities who the men were. The authorities go to the accused men and tell them they have been implicated in a felony. The men say they aren't guilty and nothing is done. It looks as though the men have gotten away with a felony. Unfair?

I don't believe the administration should forget the incident, but unless the woman files charges, they can't discipline anyone just because someone pointed a finger.

I also believe those in the administration who question what the victim was doing in the A-dorm at that time of night are missing the point: she reported a crime—not that she had no business over there.

accountable for the actions of a few.

Yes, I realize a rape was reported and I, too, am outraged it might have happened. Rape is on my list of heinous crimes and whoever could have been involved should be made to face the music.

But whoever wasn't involved shouldn't have to suffer the guilt-by-association syndrome that's been suggested.

New York finally defeats Blue Jays

NEW YORK (AP)—A batting order literally pulled out of a hat rapped out 14 hits and Don Gullett notched his first American League triumph as the New York Yankees snapped a five-game losing streak Wednesday by defeating the Toronto Blue Jays 7-5.

The Yankees, who had managed just 26 runs while dropping eight of their first 10 games, scored five times off Steve Hargan, 1-1, chasing him in the second inning.

Gullett allowed three runs and six hits in the first three innings, then held the Blue Jays hitless until they chased him with two runs on three hits in the eighth.

The batting order was determined by lot from slips of paper pulled from Manager Billy Martin's cap by Reggie Jackson, and it produced the most runs and hits of the young season.

Minnesota homers beat Royals, 3-2

KANSAS CITY (AP)—The Minnesota Twins, with five double plays and solo home runs by Larry Hise, Dan Ford and Craig Kusick, nipped the Kansas City Royals 3-2 last night.

Hise and Ford tagged starter Paul Splittorff with back-to-back homers to give the Twins a 2-0 lead in the third. The Royals scored an unearned run in the third on shortstop Roy Smalley's misplay of Amos Otis' grounder, and tied it in the sixth with Fred Patek's RBI single.

Mark Littell, 1-1, relieved Splittorff in the eighth and with two outs, Kusick homered.

Tom Burgmeier, 1-1, who gave up six hits in four and one-third innings, got the victory.

Parachute club shot down in third allocation session

By BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Parachute Club was denied student funding last night by Student Senate as tentative allocations ground into its third session.

The club had requested $300 to replace four old parachute canopies. In rejecting the attempt, the body approved Senate Finance Committee's recommendation to deny the club funds.

Parachute Club had previously asked for $1,080, but reduced its request last night to $300.

"This doesn't even make a dent in what we need, but it will help some," Rex Westmeyer, club president, told the body. "Those old excuses about not having enough money just aren't going to cut it. First make sure you don't have the money."

SOME SENATORS said funding the club would set a precedent and senate would soon receive requests from other clubs, but Westmeyer said the club should be allowed to come before Senate for funding.

"I think that's a tired excuse," he said. "I don't think I have to prove to anybody the validity of our request."

Westmeyer said the club owned 11 main parachute canopies but that many of them needed replacement. Some senators said the club needed funding to provide safe equipment.

"You're obviously not listening to what he (Westmeyer) is saying," George Granberry, senior in radio and television, told the body. "Parachuting is a dangerous sport."

"If you can allocate $650 for food (to International Coordinating Council), you can allocate $300 to keep people from killing themselves."

A SECOND amendment, which would have allocated the club $200, also failed.

In other action, Senate approved finance committee's recommended $22,905 allocation for the Student Governing Association (SGA), amid unsuccessful attempts to increase its public relations, travel and magazine subscription allotments to the levels requested by Student Body President Terry Matlack.

"I submitted this budget because I think this is what we need to have an effective organization," Matlack said. "We've been talking throughout allocations about setting priorities. I think we've got to be one of our priorities."

The first amendment would have increased the public relations allowance from the recommended $1,300 to the requested $1,540 to increase the number of full-page SGA Collegian ads from the recommended two to the requested four.

THE AMENDMENT also would have increased out-of-state travel expenses from $250 to $500 and magazine subscriptions allowance from $165 to $190.

Senate voted down the public relations section amid arguments SGA did not need additional advertising.

TWO FURTHER attempts to increase the public relations allowance to $1,400 and $1,420 failed after short debate.

After the vote, Matlack said he hoped the public relations allowance would come up again April 28 when Senate makes a final decision on tentative allocations.

Matlack said the $250 out-of-state travel increase would have been used to send a K-State student to a national conference next year.

Senate also approved finance committee's recommended $4,930 tentative allocation for International Coordinating Council (ICC). The organization had originally requested a budget of $5,290.

The committee recommended senate not approve ICC's $360 request, which would have enabled members to attend a conference in Texas.

SENATE ALSO approved a $12,560 tentative allocation for K-State's student attorney, student grievance counselor and related items.

Student Attorney Nyles Davis will receive an $11,100 salary, and senate placed $900 in a reserve account to be used if funding is continued next year for the student grievance counselor.

Matlack, Badger attend symposium on U.S. presidency in Washington

Student Body President Terry Matlack returned Monday from Washington D.C. after attending a national student leader symposium on the study of the United States Presidency over the weekend.

"I was very pleased with the conference and discussions," Matlack said. "I learned a lot about what people expect of the President."

The conference, attended by student leaders from more than 400 universities around the country, is sponsored annually by the Center for Study of the Presidency.

Matlack said staff and cabinet members of past and current administrations, most notably former Attorney General Elliot Richardson, spoke to the students about issues facing the nation, such as President Carter's energy proposals.

Former Student Body President Chris Badger also attended the symposium. Last year, symposium members elected him co-chairman and counselor for this year's conference.

Student press differences denoted in rights workshop

By PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

The Constitution applies to people of all ages, but freedom of the press means different things to elementary and high school students than it does to college students, according to K. D. Moran of the National Organization on Legal Problems of Education (NOLPE).

Moran and Jason Schaff, managing editor of the Collegian, spoke at a workshop on freedom of the student press Wednesday as part of the student legal rights seminar sponsored by Union Program Council and the K-State American Civil Liberties Union.

"Criticism of school officials at any level cannot be censored," Moran said. "I am opposed to censorship of any kind under any circumstances."

MORAN POINTED out, however, some distinction must be made between high school and college publications. Schaff agreed with Moran and said some type of advising is necessary to teach high school students the basic rules of journalism.

"There is no real line between a college newspaper and a city newspaper," Schaff said, "but there is a line between high school and college papers."

Moran cited several cases which have established guidelines for the press. One such case concerned a black student union at the University of Kansas which wanted to publish a paper which used obscenities and recommended the use of weapons against police.

"Obscenity for the sake of obscenity does not belong anywhere, but that does not mean it should be censored," Moran said. "I do not believe there should be some third party telling me what I can or cannot read."

Moran said college administrations do not have the right to remove editors or control the collegiate press, even when the paper is completely funded by the college. Reporters and editors must be aware of libel laws and be accountable for their actions, however.

SCHAFF SAID because the Collegian is a student produced newspaper, some officials feel there should be some type of censorship.

"Ideally there shouldn't have to be a need for censorship," Schaff said. "If a reporter is fair and accurate there should be no problem."

Schaff does not consider the Collegian a laboratory paper because the staff members are paid and do not receive class credit. The Collegian's position is unique because it is neither an independent publication nor one funded totally by university money, he said.

"We are lucky to have this middle of the road situation," Schaff said. The Collegian receives its money in part through student line items, and the remainder through advertisement.

"It is a good idea for a paper to get a large portion of its money on its own, but at the same time it is almost impossible to produce an underground newspaper," Schaff said.

A city paper is under a number of pressures a college paper does not face, Schaff said. A city paper is controlled by a single publisher, while a college paper has no single person in complete control.

"A student newspaper is the freest type of paper you can have," Schaff said.

Students' evaluations play major role in offering tenure to faculty members

By DIANA PUTNAM
Collegian Reporter

Teacher evaluations by students play a major role in deciding whether faculty members receive tenure, according to Chris Badger, former student body president.

Badger and Dana Elmer, tenure and appointment coordinator of the SGS office, spoke Wednesday as part of the student legal rights seminar.

"It is important and hard for the student to understand their role in teacher evaluation," Badger said. "Tenure must be offered to an instructor after a certain period of time or else he must be fired."

"This is a decision that used to be made by the department heads and faculty," he said.

About five years ago, however, a teacher was awarded an outstanding teaching award and denied tenure. The students were angered and went through channels to enable themselves to have a voice in tenure decisions.

ELMER explained each college council is responsible for informing non-tenured instructors of the evaluations and administering the evaluation in each of the instructor's classes.

"Students are the third beneficiaries of the evaluations, for they are greatly affected by the outcome," Badger said. "It's similar to a consumer, for the student is investing money and time into an education, and the instructor determines the value of it."

"Many students have the idea that their input is worthless," Badger said. "That is wrong here at K-State, and it is extremely important that the students understand its importance."

Many instructors disapprove of the evaluations because a favorable or unfavorable evaluation often depends on the course, not the instructor's teaching ability. An easier course is likely to get a more favorable response, he said.

Many instructors do not use the evaluations because they are not required.

New roles reshape American families

NEW YORK (AP)—American parents want to teach their children traditional values on marriage, hard work, religion and material success, even though many of the grown-ups don't always believe what they're advocating for the youngsters.

That's one of the conclusions of a study released Wednesday on the American family. The survey was conducted by the polling firm of Yankelovich, Skelly and White, Inc., for General Mills, Inc. It was the second in a series of research reports sponsored by the company's Consumer Center.

The survey covered 1,230 families with children under the age of 13 and the results were projected to apply to the 23 million American families who fall into that category. The findings do not apply to the more than 30 million United States families without children or with youngsters only 13 and over.

DISCUSSING the study at a news conference, Daniel Yankelovich said it "finds them (families) in a pretty good mood ... but there are signs of strain. People say they're coping; they seem to be coping; but the strain is there."

He said the strain develops from the conflict between the traditional belief that parents should sacrifice for their children and "the new preoccupation with self-fulfillment. This conflict seems to be reshaping the nature of the American family."

Yankelovich said a new type of "implied contract" is developing between parents and children.

The parents sacrifice less for and expect less from their children. Sixty-seven per cent believe that children do not have an obligation to their parents regardless of what the parents have done for them.

YANKELOVICH said the parents surveyed believe that adults should have a life of their own—even if it means spending less time with the children. Almost two-thirds disagree with the idea that parents should stay together for the sake of the children even if they are not happy. Children aged six to 12 who were interviewed for the survey disagreed. Only 49 per cent said parents should separate if they are not happy.

Yankelovich said the pollsters found two types of families: "new breed" and "traditionalist." The new breed, representing 43 per cent of those surveyed, are less child-oriented and more interested in self-fulfillment; they reject the importance of marriage as an institution and place little stress on saving money, hard work for its own sake and other traditional values.

The 57 per cent identified as traditionalists tend to be stricter disciplinarians and more demanding of their children; they are ready to sacrifice for the youngsters, although less so than in the past.

Yankelovich said, however, that both groups want to pass traditional values on to their children. Many of the parents said they wanted to teach their children certain standards they themselves had rejected.

THE PARENTS were given a list of 11 traditional beliefs and asked to select one of three options: believe and want children to believe; have doubts, but still want to teach to children; and don't believe and don't want children to believe.

Fifty-six per cent said they doubted the people in authority know best, but they still wanted to teach the concept to their children. Forty-seven per cent doubted that people are basically honest, but wanted their children to accept it. Other values which one-third or more of those surveyed said they doubted, but wanted to teach their children were: duty before pleasure; any prejudice is morally wrong; happiness is possible without money; my country right or wrong; and everybody should save money, even if it means doing without things right now.

Repairs to begin on child care site

With an initial allocation of $15,000 for the effort, major renovations will begin May 2 on the house chosen for the campus child care center.

According to Case Bonebrake, physical plant director, the two-story house north of Derby Food Center, has been inspected and minor work has begun on it.

"Drawings have already been made on the building," Bonebrake said. "Essentially, there will be reinforcement of the rafters, replacement of partitions, replacement of the first floor, new heating and electrical systems and plumbing replacements."

The funds for the renovation have come out of University reserves for maintenance, according to Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs.

"We keep a small reserve for maintenance purposes and out of that fund we took the $15,000 for the house," he said.

Beatty said if more money is needed for the project it may come out of research funds.

"I'm not sure if that 15 (thousand dollars) will be the end of the project, it was used to start it," he said.

The center will be used by the Department of Family and Child Development for child care and training of students in child care.

Davis states need for legal teaching

By BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

Preventive legal education could reduce the number of legal problems involving K-State students, said Nyles Davis, K-State student attorney.

Davis explained the functions of his position Wednesday as part of the Student Legal Rights Seminar in the Union.

The bulk of the cases heard by the student attorney concern landlord-tenant problems, Davis said.

"Most of the complaints have to do with termination of tenancy," he said. "Many of these problems could be avoided by stressing preventive legal education."

Most complaints deal with the recovery of security deposits and are generally handled in an informal nature, Davis said.

"I usually just write the lan-lord and inform him of the situation," he said.

UNIVERSITY related student grievances which are not legal in nature, are passed from the student attorney to the student grievance counselor.

"This is another attempt to reduce the number of cases the student attorney is responsible for," said Ted Knopp, student grievance counselor, who also spoke at the seminar.

"I think every student here has a right to know where policies are made that affect him every day and should have some place to go to air their grievances," Knopp said.

The primary purpose of the student grievance counselor is to act as a facilitator between the student and the appropriate group or individual who can resolve the problem, Knopp said.

"Whether we can get people to use this service will continue to be a great challenge, but right now the future looks bright," he said.

Court won't insist mottoes be shown

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court ruled Wednesday that you are not required to display ideological messages such as "Live Free or Die" that states put on auto license plates.

Using one family's objection to that motto on New Hampshire license plates, the Supreme Court said an individual can refuse to display the messages on auto plates or other personal property.

"We are faced with the question of whether a state may constitutionally require an individual to participate in the dissemination of an ideological message," the seven to two majority of the court said. "We hold that the state may not do so."

The decision opens the door for citizens to challenge slogans of other states such as North Carolina, which displays "First in Freedom" on its license plates. Whether it would apply to Illinois, which stamps "Land of Lincoln" on its plates, or other states with seemingly innocuous mottoes on license plates is not clear.

The court's opinion, written by Chief Justice Warren Burger, said New Hampshire residents George and Maxine Maynard should not have been forced to advertise a slogan they found morally, ethically and religiously repugnant because their beliefs are protected by the First Amendment.

The court's decision does not bar New Hampshire from putting its motto on auto tags, only that citizens cannot be prosecuted for refusing to display it.

K-State groups launch clean-ups

Manhattan's vacant lots are receiving a face lift this week by members of two K-State fraternities and one sorority in conjunction with national "Pitch In!" week.

Phi Kappa Tau, Sigma Alpha Epsilon and Kappa Alpha Theta approached Manhattan Community Development (CD) about the proposed clean-up project April 1, said Walt Roddy, Phi Kappa Tau member and prime organizer of the project.

"We decided, in cooperation with the city, to clean up the vacant city lots on the southern side of the city," Roddy said.

Marvin Butler, CD director, said the city owns and maintains vacant land on which it hopes to build houses or use for industrial growth.

"The students will be cleaning fence posts and trash which has accumulated on the lots," Butler said. "We are hoping this project will convince the residents of the nearby neighborhoods to clean up their own land. You can't expect this to happen if the city itself doesn't clean up its land first."

RODDY, PHI Kappa Tau scholarship chairman, said he got the idea for the project when looking for scholarship ideas for his fraternity. The sponsors of "Pitch In!" week, are offering scholarships for clean-up projects across the nation, he said.

"We had a slow start Monday," Roddy said. "On Tuesday it picked up on the number of members helping and we expect to have at least 40 or 50 people helping by the end of the week."

Butler said the city is enthusiastic about the students' project and believes it will improve the city's appearance.

"The students' work will only be this week, but beginning next week the city will have its annual clean-up," Butler said. "We hope the initiative shown by the students will spur members of the community to pitch in to benefit their neighborhoods."

Lafene offers plan for students-to-be

A summer health care coverage plan will be offered by Lafene Student Health Center for $10 to K-State students not attending summer school.

Students are eligible for the program with proof of pre-enrollment for fall. The same services students receive during the school year will be available.

Coverage begins at 8 a.m. June 6 and ends at 5 p.m. July 29. Registration at Lafene is from May 2 to 20. After May 20, fees are $20.

The city project by the three Greek houses is separate from K-State's Environmental Awareness Center (EAC) activity this week.

EAC is pitching in this week by cleaning up areas used by K-State students such as Hackberry Glen, Rocky Ford, Sunset Zoo, Pottawatomie County State Lake No. 2 and Pillsbury Crossing.

Brent Jacques, EAC director, said any student or organization on campus desiring to help the center is welcome. He added "Pitch In!" week is a national clean-up campaign involving college students.

Senate keeps WRC alive with $730

By THE SGA STAFF

Overturning a Student Senate Finance Committee recommendation last night to eliminate funds to Women's Resource Center (WRC), senate tentatively allocated the service $730 as the body moved into its fourth allocation session.

The action came after two unsuccessful attempts to fund WRC its original request of $1,065 and then $675.

"I was pretty confident we'd get something," said Ann Benson, WRC director. "I had talked to enough senators that I was pretty confident."

Mick Morrell, Finance Committee vice chairman, argued against any funding because he said WRC duplicated many services offered elsewhere. He also said WRC received about two-thirds of its funding from the Center for Student Development. "We're not cutting out the entire program," he said, defending the committee's stance. "SGA funds a third of WRC's budget, the rest comes from Holtz Hall."

"I've heard from several people in living groups that have attended WRC programs that have said they weren't really satisfactory programs," he said. "The same information could be obtained in other places. I don't like to sound like a male chauvinist but I really can't justify funding this group."

BENSON SAID she would fight for the honorarium funds the group had requested but didn't receive when senate meets Thursday to finalize its tentative allocations for all funded groups.

In other action, a $2,750 University for Man (UFM) salaried non-student director position was approved last night by senate against Finance Committee's recommendations to drop the position.

The committee had recommended senate drop the position because projected tight funds could not justify the position, Morrell said.

"I think it was necessary—they needed this salaried position," Morrell said after the vote to increase UFM's tentative allocation from the recommended $15,311 to $18,006. "But I hate to see us having to take money out of contingencies."

Currently, senate's contingency reserve contains $11,000, but Morrell said this would erode if senate continued to fund groups at higher levels than the committee had recommended.

"I am very pleased about their decision on the director's position," said Ann Swegle, UFM non-student director.

SWEGLE SAID, however, she was disappointed in senate's rejection of an amendment to give the organization $240 to send UFM members to a free university conference UFM will sponsor this year in Illinois.

"I'm very disappointed about the decision not to allocate the $240 for travel," she said. "We intend to appeal this decision. It's going to look pretty damn stupid for us not to attend a conference we set up."

In other action, senate voted to reimburse the K-State soils judging team $188, which was spent last week to send the team to a national tournament in South Carolina.

The team had originally requested $242, but Agriculture College Council discovered some unspent reserve funds which it gave the team.

"The soils team represents the total University, it's not just the agriculture department," said E.J. Compton, agriculture senator and one of the bill's sponsors.

SOME SENATORS argued against funding the team, saying senate's money problems could not justify giving it senate funds.

"With the financial situation as it is, I really don't see how we can fund this," said Skip Boyd, senate chairman.

"Whether it's a sports club or not, we're still going to have to figure out where the money's coming from," said Randy Groves, engineering senator.

Senate also referred the $12,720 ID card center request to a special three-member task force to study the quality of the new laminated ID cards, which has come under attack at the past two senate meetings.

A resolution aimed at limiting college council spending abuses was finally approved after being tabled for the past two weeks.

The resolution forbids the councils to use council funds for capital improvements and equipment and also prohibits the councils from spending council money on gifts, except under unusual circumstances.

Dorm search, seizure rights unclear

By DENISE NICKLE
Collegian Reporter

The Bill of Rights protects citizens from unreasonable search and seizures, but the rights of Kansas college students living in residence halls have not been clearly defined, according to Bill Cravens, interim director of the Kansas American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

Cravens, Lyman Baker, Kansas ACLU president and Don Nieman, Kansas ACLU board member, discussed student rights during search and seizure Thursday as part of the K-State student legal rights seminar.

Although various states have tried student search cases, "there is no way of determining what the law is in Kansas because there haven't been any lawsuits involving it (search and seizure) in Kansas," Cravens said.

UNIVERSITY OFFICIALS may enter a dorm room to perform custodial functions and if they find anything illegal they may submit it as evidence in court, Nieman said.

"But they can't poke around in your drawers," he said.

Often University officials announce room searches for health and safety violations.

"If you leave your stuff out and they come around looking for roaches, the buggy sort, and they come across a dismembered body, they don't have to close their eyes to it," Baker said.

"The same thing holds for marijuana," he said. "They can take possession of it and turn it over to the police."

Officials may also inspect rooms if they smell peculiar odors or if they have reason to believe a student is violating university regulations.

"If you give someone a legitimate reason to search your premises, you're asking for it," Baker said.

Many housing contracts include room search clauses which the student must acknowledge when he signs a dorm contract.

Fraternities differ on causes of racial separation of houses

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the final part of a five-part series on interracial problems at K-State.

By BEN WEARING
News Editor

It takes courage, determination and maybe a lot of luck to successfully cross the racial barrier in K-State's fraternities.

There are 29 fraternities on campus—three of them black—and currently, there are no blacks living in white fraternities or vice versa.

In recent years, only a handful of men—black or white—have been accepted in different fraternities. Explanations for the lack of interaction range from pressure from alumni and peers, ignorance of the fraternity and cultural differences to discrimination.

"Most of our rushing is done with recommendation from people in the house and the guys in the house don't know too many blacks," said Steve Young, junior in finance and president of Acacia Fraternity.

"A lot of the guys are from small towns—this would be the first time they would be near a black," Young said. "Their only contact is negative—what they read in the papers."

YOUNG, who grew up with blacks in Chicago, said it would be hard for a black student to get in Acacia.

"He would probably have to work harder to get in—be more outgoing," he said. "It would probably take more personality. I think there would be a lot of opposition."

Since he's been a member, Acacia hasn't rushed a black student, he said.

A member of another fraternity, who wished to remain unidentified, said a black student would have to be "super sharp" to get into his house.

"He would have to be sharper than the rest to get in," he said. "If you think about it, you just rush white people."

"You don't look for a black person—you have to have something going for you, but more so if you're black. It's prejudice—there's nothing else you can say."

BRUCE BARRETT, senior in agronomy and president of Alpha Kappa Lambda, said his fraternity hasn't had a black member since he's been here, but doesn't believe there would be any problem.

Grisolia fails to show

Student Tribunal to repeat impeachment proceedings

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

A constitutional technicality and the absence of the defendant postponed the impeachment of student senator Bill Grisolia Thursday by Student Tribunal.

Grisolia called the Student Government Services office Thursday at 12:30 p.m. and said he would not appear at the proceedings, scheduled for 4:30 that afternoon.

Speaking from his 18th floor Kansas City hotel room, Grisolia said he was managing a rock band that had a show Wednesday night and he had to stay in Kansas City Thursday afternoon on business.

GRISOLIA said he did not think his managing a rock band would interfere with his ability to be a senator.

"I have too much time to do both, I spend more time on senate than I should," Grisolia said.

"If the proceedings are political, I will lose. If they are objective, I will win," he said. "The significant achievements that I have been responsible for will ultimately and eventually save me from being convicted.

The decision to postpone the hearing was made by Tribunal after the student members of the board were sworn into office Thursday.

Student Tribunal Chancellor John Bosch said Grisolia received notice of the proceedings last Friday by certified mail, but the notice did not include a statement of the court procedure as required by SGA by-laws.

BOSCH SAID Grisolia's absence was the main reason the proceedings were postponed.

"The most important reason was we felt it would be hard for him to get a fair trial not being present," he said.

Grisolia was brought up for impeachment by Student Senate after accumulating four unexcused absences. Charges to be made against Grisolia include missing six senate meetings and three Finance Committee meetings.

The postponement of the hearing was questioned because the SGA by-laws state that "failure to appear at a hearing would not delay the hearing." The by-laws also say that if either the defendant or the plaintiff wish to postpone the hearing, they must submit a written request.

BOSCH HAD earlier said Grisolia's request to delay the proceedings was not valid because it was a phone call and not written.

Edgerley said the decision to postpone the hearing was up to Tribunal.

"The by-laws say that not appearing does not mean they have to delay the hearing, but it doesn't mean they cannot delay the hearing," he said. "It was the Tribunal's decision to make and they made it."

"The hearing will be next week and I don't think a week will make that much difference. I would just as soon see Bill at the hearing."

WASHINGTON—The nearly 38 million Americans who receive Social Security or Supplemental Security Income will get a 5.9 per cent increase in benefits starting July 1.

The size of the automatic increase, announced Thursday by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, reflects the rise in the cost of living during the 12 months that ended March 31.

Larger checks will be going to 33.4 million Social Security recipients and 4.3 million aged and disabled recipients of the federal Supplemental Security Income—SSI—payments.

This means the average Social Security monthly benefit for an elderly couple, both of whom are on Social Security, will go from $377 to $400. The average retired worker living alone will get a $13 increase, raising the monthly benefit to $234.

KANSAS CITY—Ten of the state's top farmers struggled to get back home to Kansas Thursday after a three-day pilgrimage to Washington, where they said they found a lot of confusion about farm problems and little promise of solving them.

Ten men chosen as district leaders in 1976 by the Kansas Farm Bureau completed an annual trip which the winners were awarded.

In Washington, they had talked with Undersecretary of Agriculture John White, with other officials of the Department of Agriculture and over breakfast Tuesday morning with the Kansas members of Congress.

Gilbert Rundell, whose two sons and he operate a large wheat, cattle and milo growing operation near Stafford, Kan. said changes in farm programs were coming so fast right now in Washington that it was impossible to predict what might finally become law.

While the Kansans were trying to get back to Kansas, the Senate Agriculture Committee, for example, had decided to recommend that target prices for wheat in 1979, 1980 and 1981 be based on cost of production.

WASHINGTON—The Carter administration has decided to set up a $100-million contingency fund to ease the transition to an independent Namibia once the territory is set free by South Africa, informed sources said Thursday night.

John Gilligan, the new administrator of the Agency for International Development, will announce the action in testimony to Congress today, the sources said.

South Africa's retention of the predominantly black territory is opposed by most members of the United Nations, and the administration supports the transition to a majority rule.

The fund is designed to assist white landowners who sell to blacks as well as give economic support to a black-run Namibian government once it is formed.

ULYSSES, Kan.—Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith said Thursday that Kansas' water problem is as serious as the energy problem.

Smith was in Ulysses to observe irrigation and conservation methods in western Kansas in preparation for serving as chairman of the Governor's Task Force on Water Resources.

"Problems associated with water, our most precious natural resource, have become acute over the last year," Smith said. "Until the past few days much of the state has suffered drought or near-drought condition. We have watched with frustration as vital groundwater tables have dropped in western areas of the state.

"I believe the water problem is as great as the energy problem and in some areas it may come sooner than the energy confrontation in our daily lives. The possibility of a future economic collapse of our great agricultural state becomes a horror beyond comprehension," he declared.

Serving should be an honor

Twenty members of the House of Representatives and at least two members of the United States Senate think the 29 per cent pay raise Congress gave itself early this year is too much. So they have decided to give it away.

Some are sending the money back to the Treasury, others are presenting it to charities, museums, as scholarships or using it to provide better services for their constituents.

Many believe the raise was extravagant and unnecessary—most opposed the wage hike in the first place.

THERE WAS no vote on the raise which Congressmen began receiving in March. It was automatic following the recommendations of a joint pay commission. At least one Congressmen has brought suit challenging this method of granting a raise without holding each individual accountable for his vote.

Among the more than 400 members of Congress the number who refused the raise is token. And some of the Congressmen who have given the money away are quite wealthy, others are using the money in thinly veiled attempts to further their cause at home—but the message they are trying to convey is important.

SERVING THIS country is an honor, however shallow it may seem at times. Members of the House and Senate are now entitled to $57,000 a year as a result of the raise. Their average constituent receives about $10,000. This gap is already too wide for a typical Congressmen to really understand the problems of his constituents.

No one believes Congressmen should starve while serving the public.

But it is awful hard to visualize the financial problems of a man when your income is more than five times greater than what he makes.

In-law confrontation

Sidney, Australia—Huglumph.

The last 13 inches of this column were deleted. The column therefore picks up with what originally was the final subject. Swine. Creep. Quidnunk.

(The explanation for these words would have been found in that part of the column which was deleted.)

Today, so that I might illustrate to all of you that even I, an academic quidnunk (the definition of that term is to be found in a previous column), can indeed reap some benefits from college classes, I am going to discuss a subject I learned about in my marriage class (which I "rarely attend").

In-laws. Mothers of wives. Fathers of wives. Wives of fathers. Brothers of man. The nature of reality. The ultimate drug trip.

ACCORDING TO my class notes, the most difficult in-law to cope with is the male's mother. But not in my case. (It also was explained in the deleted part of this column that I am going to get married in May). My future father-in-law and I have yet to hit it off.

He's a farmer and I'm a big city kid. He knows about cows and wheat. I know about rats and sewers.

And so, when I was preparing to make my first visit to the farm this summer, I had to think up questions. You know, getting acquainted questions. Intelligent questions. After all, the only things I'd heard about farmers is what some are rumored to do (with?) their sheep(s?).

Our first meeting was, to make a pun which will readily become apparent, a washout.

For one, I fell in a raging creek (you may now laugh at the pun) and nearly drowned not more than three miles from their farmhouse.

FORTUNATELY, a local farmer found me and took me to the house. I showed up at the door barefoot, dripping wet and minus my keys, which had been swept away by the ragin stream.

For one reason or another that didn't make a good impression.

"Hello, Mr. and Mrs. Carney, I'm Steve and I'm all wet."

After I'd dried out, I began to pop the get-acquainted questions.

"Is that wheat out there?"

"Nope. It's weeds."

"Is there money in cows?"

"I've never found any."

"How often do you feed the hogs?"

"Yep."

"Are sheep nice?"

No answer.

I gave up and tried to regroup. We definitely weren't communicating.

I DECIDED that the next day I'd ask to ride around the farm with him. Maybe then intelligent and pertinent questions would just naturally pop out of me.

But during lunch that next day, I remembered that the finals of Wimbledon (that's the most important professional tennis tournament of the year) were to be televised that afternoon. I wouldn't miss Wimbledon for the world.

And so I plopped myself down in front of the TV right after lunch. Turned out he thinks sports are stupid.

Wimbledon happened to last five hours that day which meant I had to graciously decline an offer to go help castrate pigs.

When he returned to the house he walked over to the TV set and turned the channel to HEE HAW. Right before match point.

I nearly cried. It must have been a subtle hint that tennis is for queers (effeminate individuals).

Today, nearly a year later, I don't ask questions about the farm. Oh, I talk to the chickens and throw rocks at the cows, but that's as far as my interest goes.

I haven't given up. When I eventually find out what a farm price support is...well, look out.

I might be able to add a cure for jock itch.

... goes to the Union Program Council for its courageous stand on showing the film "Immoral Tales."

On April 13, UPC officials decided the film should not be shown because its explicit sexual scenes were not done in "good taste" and it might be bad for the Union to show it.

The film was shown Sunday as part of the International Film Series and on Monday the forthright UPC officials decided since IFS season ticket holders could view the film the student public should be able to see it.

"Tales" was shown Tuesday to sellout audiences in the Union Little Theatre while two Marx Brothers films were shown as the Kaleidoscope offering.

Thus, for senselessly banning a film and rescinding the ban without saying it was wrong, the Union Program Council receives a one-handed round of applause quieter than the snip of the censor's scissors.

Love is more than a four letter word

It's spring again and everyone wants to get into the traditional act. Spring fever becomes active and 'love is in the air' (gag).

A sense of play interrupts the sense of duty and we shed our winter clothes and winter moods.

So be it, we'll talk about love again—but this time, very skeptically.

Love is a four letter word and in its over usage, is just about as offensive as those other four-letter words that the purity leagues get so upset about.

The phrase 'I love you' is used as a filler between breaths these days. We wear it out.

IT COMES from the mouths of strangers or after a traumatic incident. A man 'loves' an attractive woman who catches his gaze. If you lose a leg or find you have six months to live, your mate will begin chanting "I love you" until you're sick of hearing it.

The age-old phrase comes after fights, compensatingly or promisingly. When you are hurt, he'll say I love you as a pain reliever. When you're both trying to be rational and mature, you utter contractual, diplomatic "I love you's."

Dramatic individuals will say 'I love you' just for effect and others say it as a cry for attention. Certainly you've heard someone at some time say, "I love you, doesn't that mean anything?"

HOW MEANINGFUL can it be when you use the same word to describe how you feel about umpteen different things?

One could say: "I love strawberries, I love fast cars, I love Italian-Jews, I love my dog, and oh yes, I love you, too!" Who wants to compete with berries or be loved like a mass of metal and a stick shift? Love gets lost in the comparative analysis.

As an emotion, love has to be clarified and made specific to each situation or person in order to have real meaning.

You may love your dog because he has a big tongue and licks nice. Let's hope you don't love your sweetheart for the same reasons. Maybe she wags her tail cutely, but that doesn't make it any more acceptable. Try kissing Rover or putting a ring on his paw.

In the traditional male-female relationship, it helps to explain what you mean when you utter those age-old words.

IT'S NOT enough any more just to say "I love you" and let it go at that. You have to define what you mean in words and actions. Send your message through the heart and the mind.

Tell him it's his hair or his crossed eyes. Tell him if it's his mind, his spirit or the way he looks at seven in the morning. Tell him it's because he's gentle or whatever—maybe he squeezes the toothpaste from the bottom of the tube or blows his nose nicely.

Just tell the ones you love all the little and big things about them that create the feelings within you in the first place. Then go ahead and say I love you.

We have enough abbreviations in our lives as is. Let's spell love out. Webster's definition just isn't good enough for me.

Elite conference to discuss future

LONDON (AP)—More than 100 of the world's most influential people, including former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, have been invited to gather privately at the 25th Bilderberg conference this weekend to discuss the course of the West.

But the founder of the series, disgraced Prince Bernhard of The Netherlands, will not be present when the session opens Friday at the sumptuous seaside Imperial Hotel at Torquay, about 140 miles southwest of London on the Devon coast.

The prince, husband of Queen Juliana, stepped down as director of the Bilderberg group and resigned his other public offices last September after a Dutch commission linked him to the Lockheed payoff scandals. Because of the scandal, last year's meeting set for Hot Springs, Va., was canceled.

FORMER British Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home, now Lord Home, is temporary chairman. He and the honorary secretaries-general for the European and American delegations gave a rare public glimpse of the Bilderberg atmosphere at a press conference Thursday.

The other two are Ernest van der Beugel of The Netherlands and William Bundy, editor of the American magazine Foreign Affairs.

All three defended the total prohibition on press coverage and the informal atmosphere of the talks, which bring together top politicians, businessmen, bankers, academics and a sprinkling of unionists from the United States and Western Europe.

This year's invitees include Kissinger, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, Italian auto magnate Giovanni Agnelli and French banker Baron Edmond de Rothschild. The topics are "the future of the mixed economies in the Western democracies" and "the Third World's demand for restructuring the world order."

City can't decide which way to grow

BY KEN MILLER
City Editor

Bulging at the seams, Manhattan is looking for a direction to grow, but according to City Planner Gary Stith, the city won't decide until August where or how far to expand.

"There are six different areas being considered," Stith said. "Some are good and some bad, but we won't know until August which are better than others."

THE PLANNING department is working on what Stith called "alternative sketch plans" which will give the city commission "a preliminary look at the city's growth and development patterns."

The need for the sketch plans was underscored in last Tuesday's commission meeting when the controversial southeast expansion issue was shelved until August when the commission will have enough information "to determine what area is most suitable for expansion," according to commissioner Terry Glasscock.

Discussion to authorize a feasibility study to send city services (water and sewage systems) over the river was met with stiff opposition Tuesday by a resident of the area who read a letter of protest to the commission in behalf of the area's residents.

The commission has been criticized for allowing steady growth west and leaving downtown behind in favor of commercial zoning accompanying westward movement.

"The study will list the pros and cons, costs, benefits and evaluate each (growth direction) alternative on its own merits," Stith said.

He listed six areas on the city's periphery as possibilities for annexation:

—Northeast; near Kimball and Tuttle Creek Blvd.
—West; west of Seth Childs Rd. and south of Anderson Ave.

—Northwest; near K-113 and Kimball Ave.
—East; near U.S. 24.

—Southeast; across the Kansas River.

—Southwest; near Stag Hill.

Expansion directly north and south is prohibited by K-State and a flood plane.

STITH said the city's land use plans and growth plans haven't been drawn up yet because his department is understaffed. The city is hiring a "planner I," however, to beef up the planner's office and speed up development of the plans.

He said the office spends much of its time answering phone calls about zoning regulations and other routine business and the extra employee will make it possible to finish the alternative sketches "within 100 days."

There are several interests involved in expansion, he said.

"Everyone has a reason for wanting to go (expand) a certain way—we need some sort of guidelines."

He said the plans will serve as a reference by which the commission can form a growth policy and make uniform decisions in annexation and zoning ordinances.

State disease center says main influenza season over

By KRIS TILSON
Collegian Reporter

People who've escaped the swine flu epidemic can breathe a sigh of relief because the main influenza season is over, said George Adams of the State Disease Prevention and Control Center in Topeka.

"The fact that swine flu didn't happen doesn't mean the (inoculation) program wasn't a success," he said. "We practice preventive medicine."

The inoculations were stopped December 17 because of the direct link between the vaccine and guillain-barre, a neurological descending paralysis.

The nation-wide program received a lot of bad publicity during the three-month program.

Federal legislation was passed putting all liability for the drug on the government's shoulders because the four drug companies, Park-Davis, Merck-Sharp-Dhome, Merrill National and Wyeth, couldn't get liability insurance. All leftover vaccines belong to the government.

Several elderly people died after receiving the inoculation and the drug was suspected as the cause of death.

"I've not read anything, personally, that linked their deaths to the vaccine," Sinclair said.

The epidemic scare started as a result of a Ft. Dix, New Jersey soldier dying from swine flu. While sick with the flu he was forced to march ten miles and died.

Lafene Student Health Center gave out 4,435 vaccines to students during the vaccination program.

"I think the Lafene staff's response in support of the program was tremendous," Roger Birnbaum, Lafene assistant administrator said. "Students reacted favorably."

Of the people receiving the vaccine 20 per cent would have contracted the disease had it actually occurred because the vaccine was only 80 per cent effective, he said.

NASC is a national organization of non-Indian people who support all struggles of Native Americans for sovereignty, self-determination and independence.

The group is concerned with sterilization of Native American women, said Ursula Wolf, graduate student in sociology.

"Indian Health Service (IHS) has sterilized many Indian women of child bearing age, at least 24 per cent," she said.

"People need to be informed to these procedures." There will be a slide presentation on the history of Native American resistance and a discussion afterwards.

Students for Political Awareness, University for Man, Socialist Study Group and the Department of Sociology are sponsoring the event.

Teachers, board negotiate salaries

BY JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

Salary increase rates for Manhattan teachers promises to be the pivotal issue in the 1977-1978 school year contract negotiations. Negotiations between teachers and the Manhattan Board of Education, now two weeks underway, are in the preliminaries, with the board reviewing the teachers proposal and issuing no counterproposals.

MANHATTAN Unified Educators Association (MUEA) representatives presented the proposal for an increase of teachers' base salary from $8,340 to $9,750, improved grievance procedures and an elimination of "redundant" language used in the contract, MUEA President David Koran said. MUEA represents the 361 teachers in Manhattan Unified District 383.

The average annual Manhattan teacher salary including fringe benefits is $12,340, compared to the state average of $11,528.

Despite the higher salaries as compared to state averages, the teachers say the salaries don't compensate for rising living costs.

Louis Area, second grade teacher at Bluemont elementary school, said salaries aren't "keeping step with inflation" and ranks that as the highest concern among teachers.

Salary levels are largely out of the hands of board members because they depend on budget amounts allocated to the district from the state legislature, said David Mickey, personnel director for U.S.D. 383 and the board's chief negotiator.

KORAN called the state budget lid for school districts "the biggest problem we have."

"The state law prevents a city like this from enjoying the education level it would (be willing to) pay for," Koran said.

He said the school budget has increased about 20 per cent annually. That increase, he said, does not meet rising expenses. He cited soaring utility rates as one expense the district struggles to keep pace with.

Since increasing expenses must be dealt with on limited budgets, funds for school materials and teachers' salaries are sacrificed, Koran said.

"When you sacrifice salaries, you're going to sacrifice well-qualified, dedicated teachers," he said.

Mickey discounted Koran's statement that the district reduces teachers' salaries to compensate for other expenses. He said the district has put into teachers' salaries what new "budget power" has come across, adding those salaries could be dipped into if future expenses keep rising.

JAMES Benjamin, district superintendent, said the district would not receive adequate funding without the budget lid.

"With the negotiations we would have no protection over the amount of money going into the district," he said. "I think it's a reasonable arrangement."

Some teachers cited other complaints.

Earl Gritton, mathematics teacher at Manhattan High School, a 22-year veteran teacher in the district, said a shortage of classroom space is "one of our major issues." He said girls' sports in the physical education department has squeezed more events into confined spaces, but the biggest problem in the district is a shortage of facilities.

Mickey said there is a problem of facility and space shortages, adding most of the schools are overcrowded. This causes an overload of students on some teachers, he said.

"I don't think teachers are satisfied with classroom sizes, and there are some bulges in some areas," he said.

Coors sales pitch discredits product

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Adolph Coors Co., a Colorado brewery, took out a full page advertisement in a Washington newspaper Thursday asking: "Please don't buy our beer."

The reverse sales pitch said an Eastern beer lover might find Coors beer flat or watery here.

"Truth be known, it often is," the ad said, going on to explain that much of the brew might be older than 60 days once it reaches Washington and that it might not have been refrigerated until sale.

TEACHER salaries have increased substantially over the past decade, according to several veteran teachers in the district. James Rezac, Manhattan High School principal, said when he taught in the district 12 years ago salaries "were the biggest gripe."

"They've come up a lot since then," Rezac said, adding living costs also have risen "tremendously."

Rezac said the district has no trouble recruiting quality teachers at present salaries, but warned those salaries must rise higher.

Area said Manhattan teachers have made progress in receiving desired salaries since she began working in the district 13 years ago.

"If I were to compare salaries and benefits with what we had when I first came in the district I would see considerable progress," Area said. "For example, the school pays sick leave, and part of Blue Cross-Blue Shield."

Big Brothers-Big Sisters host softball meet, carwash

A benefit softball game will kick off the Manhattan Big Brothers-Big Sisters Week Sunday through Saturday, April 30.

Local disc jockeys and the K-State Diamond Darlings will pair up against the Big Brothers-Big Sisters (BBBS) Sunday at 2 p.m. at Cico Park.

Twelve clowns from the University for Man clown class will ride around the Manhattan area on the Pi Kappa Alpha fire truck prior to the game.

AT THE GAME, the clowns will referee and entertain the spectators and players. Refreshments will be served.

A grand opening of the BBBS office will be Monday in the First Methodist Church Educational Center. The office space was donated to the organization by the church, according to Dick Smith, president of the Manhattan BBBS program.

There will be a car wash from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, April 30 at the Union National Bank.

In addition to this special week of activities, the organization will have an aluminum collection program as a fund-raising project. Collection sites are Doebele's IGA in Aggieville and Campbell's Distributing Co. on K-18. Cans may also be donated at any of the activities throughout BBBS Week.

THE BIG brothers and sisters, 55 per cent of which are K-State students, spend a few hours each week with children from the ages of five to 17.

"Any boy or girl who has lost a parent or needs friendship, guidance and love from an adult outside the family is eligible to receive help from volunteers," Smith said.

Special activities of the program include campouts, picnics and trips to museums and Worlds of Fun.

In the past year and a half, the number of children participating in the program has grown from 25 to 160.

"With such an increase in children, the program needs more volunteers," Smith said.

"Being a volunteer has no special requirements except a real concern and interest in helping these boys and girls," he said.

Volunteer information can be obtained by calling 776-3592 or 776-9575 or by writing Box 252, Manhattan.

Coal industry anticipates production of a billion tons

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—America's coal industry believes it can produce one-billion tons of coal annually by 1985, as proposed by President Carter, but it warns that strict environmental standards may prevent consumers from using the coal.

"The productive capacity is there," Rex Chaney, a spokesman for the National Coal Association, said Thursday. "We made a survey less than a year ago that indicates that the industry is planning about 500 million tons of new capacity over the next 10 years, so the plans are on the drawing board to achieve this objective."

"A whole lot depends on what the Congress does in response to the administration line and how vigorously the administration pushes some of the more restrictive (environmental) proposals," he said.

DURING a speech before a joint session of Congress on Wednesday, Carter said that one of the goals of his national energy policy "will be conversion from scarce fuels to coal whenever possible," and called for an annual production increase of 400 million tons. About 665 million tons of coal were produced last year.

The industry currently faces a two-fold obstacle to increased production: proposed federal surface mine legislation that would dictate mining practices and reclamation, and clean air standards governing the use of coal by industry and utilities.

The Clean Air Act of 1970 set restrictions on the amount of sulfur emissions produced from burning coal. However, an industry spokesman said utilities used about 200 million tons of coal last year that were technically in violation of the clean air standards.

OTHER factors to be considered are the availability of capital to finance expansion of coal operations, availability of rail transportation to move the product, and long-standing labor-management struggles, the spokesman said.

United States Steel Corporation President David Roderick estimated that utilities will need a whopping $70 billion to convert to coal-fired plants while the coal industry itself will need $20 billion to open the necessary new mines by 1985. Railroads will require $8 billion to gear up to handle the coal.

"I've seen nothing but efforts to toughen the air quality standards and impose federal strip mine legislation," said Tom Duncan, president of the Kentucky Coal Association. "We say we need to produce 400 million tons more each year when in fact the substantive things happening are making it harder to mine and harder to burn coal. Those things say more to me than (Carter's) rhetoric."

DAN ANDERT, a spokesman for Peabody Coal Co., the nation's largest producer with 69.7 million tons last year, is waiting for Carter to draw the line between production and the environment.

"Environmental concerns in the process of mining obviously have to be considered," said Andert.

"I guess what we're basically saying is that we can live with some restrictions relative to the environment as long as they are imposed with a certain amount of reason. We realize you can't just go around and tear things up and forget about it."

SEWING THE COSTUMES . . . The costumes for the upcoming presentation of the Greek play, "Lysistrata," are hand-sewn onto the actor's outfit. The use of the foam rubber is to create a feeling of voluptuousness. Working on the project are Gay Jones (left), Susan Rezac and Anne Lacy. The play will be presented Apr. 28, 29 and 30 in McCain Auditorium.

Bizarre costumes created for play

BY KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

Bizarre attire including false breasts, fat suits and false phalluses are part of the costuming for the upcoming production of "Lysistrata."

"Lysistrata" is a tale of the battle of the sexes in ancient Greece. The costumes reflect this time era.

The costumes are realistic relating to the era, Suzanne Bunker, speech instructor and costumer for "Lysistrata" said.

They are, however, altered slightly to "reveal the sexual aspects in a humorous fashion," Bunker said.

SOME of the actors will be wearing the "Himation," a long traditional robe over their other costumes.

The bodies of the actors will be distorted by the use of foam rubber which is used to give the actors a voluptuous look. Foam Rubber "fat suits" which have been individually fit to each actor will be underneath tights to give the proper effect.

The females will also wear false breasts that come in three shapes—youthful, middle-age droop and old with a definite droop. They are constructed of muslin and stuffed with fiberfill. Split peas are used in the ends to create the drooping effect, Bunker said.

THE phalluses are also made of muslin and fiberfill. They also come in different sizes and will be worn at different angles but they all come in the same color—red. Red was chosen because in Greek theatre, red leather phalluses were used, Bunker said.

The purpose of the special effects is to make the actors appear as caricatures of human beings instead of real people, Bunker said.

All the costumes were designed by Lydia Aseneta, assistant professor in speech and realized by Bunker.

"It has certainly been fascinating building them," Bunker said. She noted that she has enjoyed using a variety of materials to create the right effect for the costumes.

They haven't been the most complex designs, Bunker noted, but they have been the most interesting.

Lovers overcome public disapproval

Editor's note: "Gable and Lombard," will be shown in the Union Forum Theatre Sunday at 7 and 9:45pm. Admission price is $1.25.

By KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

Only one comment could fit the spectacular film "Gable and Lombard,"—well done.

The tempestuous, stormy and tragic love affair between Clark Gable and Carol Lombard is depicted beautifully in the film written by Barry Sandler.

Lombard was a fiery, self-assured starlet and Gable, a man's man. Their first meetings were punctuated with arguments and plenty of humor.

GABLE thought Lombard was simply a dame who needed to be put in her place. Lombard thought Gable was a nothing who deserved nothing.

Despite their first impressions, they fell in love, the kind of love neither had felt before.

That is when the controversy began. Gable was still legally married to his second wife, Ria, but they hadn't lived together for two years.

Louis Mayer, head of Metro Goldwyn Mayer studios warned Gable of the consequences of his seemingly illicit love affair and what it could do to his as well as Lombard's career.

LOMBARD received a similar warning from the head of Paramount studios.

After some difficult times, Gable and Lombard decided to continue seeing each other and to try to keep it a secret.

James Brolin plays Gable. Brolin is most well known for his portrayal of Dr. Kiley on the television series, "Marcus Welby."

He has the facial expressions, voice and body movements polished and it's hard to remember he's not really Gable.

Jill Clayburgh portrays Lombard with the classic Lombard style. She is intense, commanding, tender and sensuous.

ALLEN Garfield does a good job as Louis Mayer. Mayer was concerned with the public's view of the studio as well as keeping his actors happy. Garfield conveyed this quite well.

The filming is beautiful. The casual elegance of Hollywood is captured on film. The beauty of Lombard and the virile good looks of Gable were handled with a subtle touch of class.

Hitchcock injects a touch of humor in 'Family Plot'

Editor's note: "Family Plot," will be shown in the Union Forum Theatre Friday and Saturday at 7 and 9:30pm. Admission price is $1.25.

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Collegian Reviewer

Many people feel Alfred Hitchcock is the 20th century's answer to Edgar Allen Poe.

Hitchcock's uncanny ability to delightfully terrorize audiences has made him a legend in the film industry.

Those expecting similar terror and suspense in his latest film, "Family Plot," will unfortunately be disappointed.

Unlike his classics, "The Birds," and "Psycho," "Family Plot," is a semi-humorous cloak and dagger thriller involving a make believe psychic and a jeweler who wants people to think he's dead.

BLANCHE Tyler is a psychic who consoles an aging woman guilt-ridden about ignoring her only living heir to the family fortune.

The lady asks Tyler to find her heir and will pay $10,000 for his recovery. The problem is the lady hasn't seen the boy in 40 years, doesn't know his name, nor where he lives.

Tyler and her cabbie boyfriend, George, begin the search for the boy and eventually stumble on to Arthur Adamson, the long lost heir.

BRUCE Dern, known for his portrayal of the arrogant Tom Buchanan in "The Great Gatsby," is the pipe-smoking cabbie who doubles as an amateur private detective. He proved he can still be arrogant but a touch of humor made his character enjoyable.

KAREN Black, perhaps the most popular actress in Hollywood, is Adamson's girlfriend in crime and it was nice to see her displaying compassion and warmth, unlike her bitter bitch portrayal in "The Great Gatsby."

The plot—no pun intended—is not difficult to understand and if you thirst for a mysterious woman dressed in black, sliding walls and secret rooms, "Family Plot," will quench that desire.

"Family Plot," will not have you on the edge of your seat nor will you devour your fingernails in anticipation. But it will cause you to become anxious and Hitchcock's incorporation of humor makes it a delightful story to watch.

Foreigner album features hard rock, trite composition

By KAY COLES

Arts and Entertainment Editor

Foreigner, the back-up band for the upcoming Doobie Brothers concert, has released its first album, "Foreigner."

The album contains much good, stable hard rock, with few innovations. Many times the songs seem sterile and understated, but they are well composed and executed.

SIDE one opens with "Feels Like the First Time," a song about love's intensity. The vocals are strong, the rhythm is driving, but the composition is a bit repetitious.

"Cold As Ice," is the next tune which has a delightful piano opening, but then drifts into trite chord progressions on the guitar. Some nice harmony is injected into the vocals which may be the only saving grace of the song.

"Starrider," features the most interesting lyrics on the album. It is a fantasy tale of interstellar flight. The musical composition here is much clearer and stronger. The use of keyboard and percussion instruments makes this song the easiest to listen to on the first side.

A TALE of the 1950's is told in "Headknocker," a driving hard rock song with more stilted chord progressions.

The best song on the album closes side one. "The Damage is Done," is a story about the pain of lost love. It has a striking composition with a dominant, unusual beat being carried throughout the song. This creation of a feeling of tension is well suited to the lyrics and shows some care being shown to correlate these two to produce a smooth package.

Mick Jones dominates the album, writing most of the music and lyrics, singing and playing guitar. The execution of the songs show the outstanding talent of Ian McDonald who plays keyboards, guitars, horns and assists in the vocals.

SIDE two opens with "Long, Long Way From Home," a song not notable for being anything but a good song with a steady beat.

"Woman, Oh Woman," is the only semi-mellow tune on the album. It's lyrics are strong and backed by good musical composition, but the song doesn't really stand on its own.

Foreigner has an entertaining sound, but they are not very innovative. The music is easy to listen to, "accessible," as Ian McDonald described it. The solid, steady beat is suited to Foreigner's style, but it can become dull if you listen to it for very long. Overall, it is a good album with excellent recording and mixing. They should provide good support for the Doobie Brothers.

Small Claims Court open to tenants

By JOCELYN SHEETS
Collegian Reporter

Tenants can enforce the Landlord-Tenant Act themselves by taking their claims to Small Claims Court without the aid of an attorney, according to Don Low, former K-State student attorney presently working in the Kansas attorney general's consumer division.

LOW outlined landlord-tenant relations in a workshop Thursday as a part of K-State's student legal rights seminar.

He said that under the Small Claims Act individuals can enforce the act by completing a form obtained from the court, paying a $5 filing fee and representing themselves in court without the aid of an attorney.

"The return of a tenant's security deposit, so long as no damages to the premises other than reasonable wear and tear, is a basic tenant right under the Landlord-Tenant Act," Low said. "A tenant should fill out an inventory sheet giving details of the condition of the premises within five days of occupying them."

This will help protect the tenant from charges of damages by the Landlord at the termination of his lease, he said. If the landlord doesn't return the security deposit or an itemized statement showing why the security deposit is forfeited, the tenant has the right to sue the landlord after 30 days of termination of his lease, Low said.

THE LANDLORD must comply with the applicable city, building and housing codes which affect the health and safety of tenants, Low said. If the landlord fails to maintain the common areas, such as plumbing and electricity, the tenant can give written notice to the landlord and the rental agreement will terminate upon a rent-paying date, he said.

The Landlord-Tenant Act excludes educational institutions, he said.

"A tenant is obligated to give 30 days written notice to his landlord before moving out," Low said. "Even if the tenant moves out in the middle of the month, providing the rent is paid monthly which is usually due on the first day of the month, he is responsible for the whole month's rent."

Low said the failure of a tenant to pay rent gives the landlord the right to give three days written notice to either pay or face court eviction. Court action is the landlord's only recourse because it is against the law for him to lock doors, turn off utilities or forcibly evict tenants by himself, he said.

"Tenants can bring claims and counter-claims against the landlord if they can show damage done to their won property because of the landlord's failure to maintain the premises up to the local housing codes," Low said.

Low said attorneys haven't been able to practice in the Small Claims Court because the cases are under $300 and presided over by associate judges. Cases under associate judges can't be appealed so the cost of an attorney would be unnecessary, he said.

Rights must be used or lost, Matlack says

Student self-government is "alive and well," but students aren't taking advantage of the opportunities open to them, said Pat Bosco, assistant dean of students, Thursday during the final session of the Student Legal Rights Seminar.

"We have a long track record of having students being in important positions on task forces, and being less prepared for the responsibilities," Bosco said. Along with the opportunities comes the responsibility of doing the work, he said.

Only when students are educated about their rights will student self-government be achieved, said Terry Matlack, student body president.

"It isn't a question anymore of students having a voice," Matlack said. "We have the mechanisms to work with, but we must educate the students toward the mechanisms open to them."

"We have great opportunities to assert our rights, now we need to help students exercise their rights," he said.

Matlack said universities are now in an "era of good feelings" after the student unrest of the 1960s.

"During the activism of the '60s, there were no avenues (for self-determination) within the system," he said. "Human rights, student rights or any other rights are something we always have to reaffirm, and if we don't, then we will be taking a step backwards."

Bill to tighten Kansas bingo passes governor's inspection

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. Robert Bennett signed into law Thursday a bill tightening the state's two-year-old bingo law.

The governor also said through his office that he was allowing a bill to become law without his signature.

The law establishes a special legislative committee to study health care costs in Kansas.

The bingo bill was in response to complaints that the law was too lax and allowed certain persons to operate bingo games who were not intended to be included when the law was passed in 1975.

Under the new law, the state will receive one-third of the taxes generated by bingo operations and the city and counties will share the remainder.

The bill puts a $1,200 ceiling on the total amount of prizes that may be awarded in a single day. The old ceiling was $1,750.

Referring to the medical cost study bill, Bennett said that he questioned "formalizing such a special committee."

Anderson angry with team

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Reds Manager Sparky Anderson said, "I'm the maddest I've ever been since I've been managing."

His team is in last place in the National League's Western Division and 5½ games in back of the Los Angeles Dodgers, who just finished a two-game sweep over the Reds.

"It isn't the losses that do it," said Anderson. "There's a way losing and there's an atmosphere of losing."

AFTER LOSING to the Dodgers Wednesday, the Reds' skipper was horrified by his own admission.

"Last Monday night I had the feeling we were respecting them (the Dodgers) more than they were respecting us," he said. "That is a horrible feeling just after getting a ring that says you're the world champion."

"Okay, we've got the fight of our lives on our hands. But let's make a fight of it, not just roll over. Sure, the Dodgers are good, but the things they're saying about the Dodgers now is what they are supposed to be saying about us."

"I mean we've got Hall of Fame players over here. Hall of Fame."

NBA refuses to enter ref dispute

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The National Basketball Association has refused a request from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service to enter the dispute between the league and its striking referees, according to a spokesman for the officials.

Atty. Richard Phillips, representing the referees, members of the National Association of Basketball Referees, said the union had asked the mediation service to help resolve the dispute over salaries and fringe benefits.

Twenty-four of the 26 NBA officials are on strike against the league and have been picketing playoff games in various league cities. However, the referees Wednesday declared a 48-hour moratorium on picketing in hopes of speeding up a settlement.

Phillips said that Rex Marlowe of the mediation service invited the NBA to a meeting to discuss the impasse, but the league refused to attend.

The NBA has refused to negotiate with the NABR, but has offered to talk with the referees on an individual basis. The union has applied to the National Labor Relations Board for certification as a bargaining agent.

ANDERSON ADMITS he hates to lose.

"Losing is for other people. It ain't for me," he said. "If I have to lose, the people with me will be living in hell." His life bears witness to Anderson's words.

"In baseball, they had to call my mother," he recalled of his days as a boy on the school playground. "I was going nuts. I told 'em I wouldn't play with guys who couldn't catch the ball. Wound up, I had to teach the guys on the team how to catch."

The Reds' manager said he won't yield to the temptation of wholesale line-up changes.

"I'm not going to make any changes. I'm not Billy Martin," he said, referring to the New York Yankees' manager who also is facing the frustrations of a slow start this season.

AS THE losses mount, Anderson thinks back to two years ago, in Montreal. He was nearly that angry then.

He called a clubhouse meeting but said he can't remember much of what he said because it all came out from his heart. He remembers accusing a number of unnamed players of being gutless.

He told them, the gutless ones, to stay out of the others way and not to trip them because they were going to win. He told them they knew who they were.

"If you're Cinderella, put the slipper on," he remembers saying.

Now, he's back in the same spot, his back against the wall, his team losing, and looking again for a Prince Charming to bring the team a happy ending.

Wildcats meet WSU in conference playoff

K-State's women's softball team meets Wichita State in a conference playoff game at Hays at 8:30 a.m. today to determine which team qualifies for state tournament competition.

Both K-State and WSU finished the regular state conference schedule with 1-3 marks. The Cats and Shockers split their two-game meeting, with K-State claiming a 5-1 victory in the opener and WSU taking the second game 4-2. Both squads lost doubleheaders to the conference champion Kansas Lady Jayhawks.

The Cats, 9-10 overall, finished fourth in the second annual Big Eight Tournament at Lawrence over the weekend.

K-State lost 5-2 to Oklahoma State in Friday's first-round action, then came back to shut out Nebraska 7-0 before losing to Missouri 2-1 on Saturday.

"I think we'll be strong against Wichita State in the playoff game," said Mary Phyl Dwight, K-State softball coach. "We played two of our best games of the season against Nebraska and Missouri. We played some of the best defensive ball we have all year and finally started running the bases like we should."

The Cats also got an outstanding performance out of their ace hurler Nancy Gardner who gave up only eight hits and two walks and was credited with 15 strikeouts in 13 straight innings.

"Nancy is throwing very well considering she's just coming back after an injury to her pitching hand," Dwight said.

Gardner, who claimed the win in K-State's earlier decision over WSU, suffered the hand injury in the Cats' first contest with KU.

If K-State defeats the Shockers, it will advance to the first round of state competition at 11:00 a.m.

Baseball team hosts OSU

K-State's men's baseball team will host the Oklahoma State Cowboys in a pressure-filled four-game series this weekend at Myers Field.

The Wildcats, 20-12, but more importantly 3-1 in the Big Eight's Western Division, need to win three games from the Cowboys.

Starting times are 1:30 p.m. today and 1 p.m. Saturday.

The four-game affair is a rematch of season openers for the two teams. OSU won three of the four games in Stillwater but has dropped to 13-19 and 0-2 on the year.

K-STATE CAN almost assure itself of a trip to the Big Eight Tournament in Oklahoma City, May 18-21, by winning three games from the Cowboys. OSU can get back into the race with a sweep.

"We're playing the best we have all year," said baseball coach Phil Wilson.

"We're getting complete games from our starters and good relief pitching," he said.

"I don't see why we can't win at least three."

K-State received complete games from Neil Hudson (4-1, 2.38 ERA), Dave Tuttle (3-3, 4.37 ERA) and Lon Ostrum (4-2, 3.55 ERA) in conference action.

Frank Seitz (4-2, 4.86 ERA) and Vern Henricks (2-1, 4.76 ERA) have strengthened the bullpen.

"We're far more aggressive at the plate," Wilson said. "We're also showing signs of becoming a good defensive ball club."

K-State is hitting .299 as a team and has committed only seven errors in the last nine games. Two weeks ago, the Wildcats averaged better than two errors a game.

Greg Korbe continues to lead the team in hits (46), RBI's (28), average (.422), slugging percentage (.750), doubles (10), home runs (5) and runs (26). Utility infielder Billy Preston, a regular at second or third, is hitting .375.

Beesley finishes third in 10,000-meter run

LAWRENCE (AP)—K-State's Larry Beesley raced to third place in the Billy Mills 10,000-meter run in the 52nd Annual Kansas Relays Thursday.

Peter Butler of New Mexico University, in what he called his first serious distance run in his life, won the 10,000-meters with a meet record of 29:10.1.

Butler, who led most of the way, broke the old record of 29:17 set by Ted Castaneda, of the Colorado Track Club, last year.

Beesley finished seven seconds behind Butler's teammate, Lionel Ortega. Ortega crossed the tape at 29:48.1.

In the other big race of the day, Terri Anderson, Kansas University's women's distance track coach and former K-State long distance runner, set an American record of 16:06.8 in winning the 5,000-meter run for women, the first time the event has been run in the KU relays.

Anderson passed Carol Cook, Iowa State, on the 11th lap of the 12-lap race and won easily. Despite running in a heavy rain, she broke the old mark of 16:28.48 set by Peg Neppel, Iowa State.

Other events in the relays Thursday were intramural tests.

New York defeats Blue Jays again

NEW YORK (AP)—Chris Chambliss, dropped from fourth to eighth in New York's potluck batting order, drove in five runs with a pair of doubles and a towering three-run homer as the Yankees defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 8-6 Thursday for their first two-game winning streak of the season.

The Yankees trailed 3-0 after former teammate Otto Velez smacked a two-run homer off Ken Holtzman in the fourth inning.

Chambliss started the comeback with a fifth double and a run-batted-in when right fielder Steve Bowling misjudged his two-out line drive in the fourth.

He doubled a run home in the sixth against starter Jesse Jefferson and scored the tying run on a single by Bucky Dent. The Yankees then pounded reliever Chuck Hartenstein, 0-1, for four runs in the seventh.

Crew competes in Big 8 tournament

K-State crew will host the Big Eight Championship tournament this Saturday morning at the Stockdale Recreation Area at Tuttle Creek.

The tournament will begin at 9 a.m. The other schools competing for the championship are the University of Nebraska and Oklahoma State University.

The Wildcats will compete in the varsity and novice men and women's races, the eight and four races in all divisions and the open singles.

Fraternity rush for blacks minimal

"There was one black we rushed three years ago, but he decided not to join," Barrett said. "I think the men in the house would accept him. I can't see where it would make any difference."

Curtis Chambers, senior in agricultural economics and president of Theta XI, approves of the current fraternity system. Richard Felton, a black student who belongs to ROTC and who was stationed this semester in Selma, Ala., is a Theta XI member.

"We've got the impression that they (black students) don't want to join," Chambers said. "I don't consider it any discrimination whatsoever. We looked at Richard because he was a superior individual—we look at all members because they are superior," he said.

"It was just like pledging another guy," Chambers said. "It was just a chance to relate to someone from a different culture."

CHAMBERS SAID Theta XI has never had a black student ask to pledge. He said Theta XI approached Felton because "he met all our qualifications."

"Some fraternities have told me they have run into roadblocks when they rush a minority student," said Jerry Lilly, assistant to the vice president for student affairs and adviser to K-State's fraternities.

"There have been many cases I've been told where they (a white fraternity) rushed a black and the black student will say he is being pressed by his fellow blacks not to join.

"I've frequently said if any fraternity wants to get a black member, they are going to have to do it in the summer before he gets to K-State," Lilly said.

"That's not true—we don't pressure anyone to join any fraternity," said Lorenzo Matthews, senior in engineering technology and president of Kappa Alpha Psi, a black fraternity.

"Some of the black men here we don't even get to know," he said. "We don't want to influence anyone not to join a white fraternity."

Mathew said five white students tried to pledge his fraternity but withdrew because of pressure from their parents.

TERRY WALKER, graduate in music and black member of Delta Upsilon, a predominately white fraternity, said there was some pressure, but "only up to a point."

"My close friends, they were as skeptical as I was," he said. "They gave me encouragement. They didn't disown me."

Walker, the first black man to live in the DU house, joined on the advice of another DU and "good friend," former student body president, Bernard Franklin, who is also black.

Walker found difficulties in joining a white fraternity.

"When I lived in the dorm, I had a black roommate," he said. "There, I could deal with whomever I wanted.

"In the house there were 65 guys under the same roof—three to a room—so there was more interaction. I was opening myself up, making myself more vulnerable than in the dorm. Most of it was good. I established a lot of good friendships."

He said a lot of the men in the house had a "limited scope" of the world.

"They thought all blacks they met would be real cool, drive big cars and wear stylish clothes. There was a significant effect on my life and their's, too," Walker said.

AFTER a University of Kansas student was allegedly denied entrance to a white sorority this semester because she is half-black, half-Japanese, the K-State Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils conducted a joint meeting in late March.

"It was an educational meeting," Lilly said. "It was simply to bring them up to date and inform them of the rules."

"Parenthetically speaking, it's probably something we should have done more often," he said. "I think it's a timely discussion because fraternities and sororities have the bulk of rush going on now."

Lilly discounts the popular theory that the alumni keep black students from entering (the greek system.)

"You can say yes or no—there's probably the same divergence of opinion that there is in the student population," Lilly said. "All the decisions are made by the undergraduates—the alumni have a peripheral role in recruitment."

WALKER SAID he thought some alumni members would object to a black member in their house. "Oh yea, I'm sure, especially in those houses that have been on campus for a long time," Walker said. "Since they hold the reins of power, they pretty much have a say over who can pledge," he said. "It's not just the alumni—I'm sure there are other guys who are prejudice."

Lilly said one problem white fraternities have is black students don't respond to rush invitations. Members of white fraternities voiced the same opinion. Walker, however, said black students aren't approached to join white fraternities. "There might be a passing reference, 'why don't you come over and eat some day,' but that's about it," he said.

He said another reason black students don't attend rush functions is they don't understand the fraternity system.

CHUCK BEY, junior in music education and member of Alpha Phi Alpha, a black fraternity, said he received "a lot" of brochures from fraternities his senior year in high school, but wasn't interested at the time.

"It was appealing, but one thing that turned me off was I got to see how they partied," Bey said. "I didn't think I could break into the social life."

U.S., Cuba may resume diplomatic relations

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration is considering the assignment of American diplomats in Cuba for the first time since the 1961 break in relations between the two nations.

At the same time, sources here said Thursday that U.S. Cuban maritime talks will be resumed shortly in Havana with Terence Todman, the assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, heading the U.S. delegation.

These developments suggest acceleration toward the restoration of relations with Cuba after a break of more than 16 years. However, one official here said, "It's premature to expect that we would have someone down there next week."

Todman would be the highest-ranked American diplomat to go to Cuba since the United States broke with the Castro regime.

Delegates from the two estranged countries held face-to-face talks last month on settling maritime boundaries. Both the United States and Cuba have a 200-mile fishing zone but are only 90 miles apart.

Hodding Carter, the State Department spokesman, said no time or place has been set for the next round of talks. He told reporters it was "logical" that Todman would head the U.S. delegation since he presided at the first round.

At present, Switzerland represents Americans in Cuba and Czechoslovakia looks after Cubans here. In the diplomatic lexicon, that is called third-country representation.

The opening of "interest sections" with American diplomats present in the Swiss Embassy in Havana and Cubans attached to the Czechoslovakian Embassy in Washington would move the relationship up a notch.

Carter said the United States had not exchanged views with Cuba on the subject. He said a number of options are under consideration.

Others open to the administration, if it chooses to establish some form of ties with Cuba, include an exchange of consular officials or a formal exchange of ambassadors. An exchange of ambassadors is considered highly unlikely at this point.

Late last month, the Carter administration took another step toward President Fidel Castro by lifting the ban on the spiraling of U.S. dollars by American visitors to Cuba.

Under a new Treasury Department license, an American who obtains a visa and goes to Cuba can buy up to $100 worth of Cuban goods for his personal use.

Ballroom dancing swings with UFM

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Collegian Reporter

The scene looks like something from yesteryear—the old-fashioned ballroom dancing class is in full swing.

The time, however, is now, and the participants aren't wearing white gloves and knickerbockers—University for Man (UFM) is holding one of its ballroom dancing classes.

About 40 students and townspeople attend these classes, according to instructor Henk Ven Deik, and much has been accomplished since the first March meeting.

THE CLASSES, which meet evenings in Justin Hall, center around learning to waltz, fox trot, cha cha cha, tango, samba and rumba.

"Ballroom dancing is a forgotten art," Ven Deik said. "Especially the Latin American dances." He cited a lack of instruction and places to do the dances as the major cause.

"You can't do the waltz in Aggieville," Ven Deik said.

Ven Deik came to the United States five years ago from Limburg, Holland where he was an exhibition dancer.

Dancing is very popular in Europe, according to Ven Deik, as are organized competitive dancing clubs.

"Here you learn how to drive when you are 16, there you learn to dance," he said.

Ven Deik, who taught at the Arthur Murray studio of dance, said exhibition dancing is "more personal" and it's "difficult to analyze what you are doing and teach it."

There is a direct connection between dance and marital problems and counseling, according to Ven Deik, a graduate student in marriage and family counseling.

"People bring conflicts to the dance floor," Ven Deik said. "Dancing is not only a physical thing, but an emotional one." Couples not sure of themselves and having trouble at home ask for help in an accusative manner in class. One of them always has to be at fault, Ven Deik said.

As a result, he said he is trying to deemphasize the notion of leading and following, and encourages couples to dance as a single unit.

Ven Deik said he believes men and women should learn each others steps so they can anticipate the other's moves and eliminate the "bossiness" in dancing.

"Ballroom dancing is too friendly for some people," Ven Deik said. "Disco dances have made people far away."

Ven Deik wants to use dancing adjacent to marriage counseling once he is certified, as both deal with people learning to relate to each other.

More roommates, less space to greet students next year

By TERRY BRUNGARDT
Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students may find living conditions in residence hall rooms a little more crowded next year.

One and three girl rooms in K-State's smaller halls—Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile—may be converted to hold one more girl. Girls may also live in what are now floor laundry rooms.

"We are changing some of the rooms in the small halls to accommodate more people," said Tom Frith, director of housing. "We don't want to turn people away from the residence halls. Putting more people in rooms that accommodate them will help."

"We are moving slowly in this project; we would like to get twenty extra people in the three halls combined."

MABEL STRONG, director of Putnam Hall, said some rooms in Putnam will have an extra person in them.

"We will have room for about ten extra people in Putnam if they do what is planned," she said.

All the rooms in Van Zile Hall with over 210 square feet will be made into three-person rooms, said Tim Landon, director of the hall. The rooms used for card playing and studying also will be turned into extra living space. Van Zile should have room for eight extra people if the plans are executed, Landon said.

Boyd Hall plans to add 10 girls. "Naturally the residents don't like it, but I feel they understand why something like this has to be done," Landon said. "The big thing residents over here don't like is that their social rooms are being taken away. But once again I think they understand why something like this has to be done."

THE DIRECTORS in all three halls said freshmen probably will be put into rooms with extra people.

"Most of the upperclassmen have lived in the crowded rooms and the girls here (Putnam) get a chance of picking their rooms so freshmen will probably be in with the extra people," Strong said.

"Sure it's a hassle," said Mary Nivens, resident assistant in Putnam Hall. "It is something that we are going to have to deal with. Of course people will complain but there have been extra people in rooms before and it has worked out. I think it will work out now."

Janelle Ramsdale, Putnam Hall resident, doesn't think the situation is good.

"Being in a room with three other people, especially when there is no air conditioning in the fall, could cause some problems," Ramsdale said.

"There is a potential for more problems. In a three-person room, it could end up with a two-on-one situation—where two roommates won't like one and give him trouble," Landon said.

Frith said no official word has been given on fall enrollment, but indications suggest more people will want to live in the residence halls.

Kay Cowley, director of Boyd Hall, said the residents of Boyd don't approve of the idea.

"I don't think they should do it," said Marjorie Wann, a Putnam Hall resident. "If they do it, it should be done on a voluntary basis and they shouldn't have to pay the same amount."

Ramsdale said she didn't think the rooms were equipped to handle the extra people.

"The big concern is having a closet for every girl in the room," Ramsdale said. "I wouldn't live in one of the rooms they are putting extra people in. I would move first."

Watergate cases appeals refused

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has voted not to review the Watergate cover-up convictions of former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and Nixon White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, National Public Radio reported Thursday.

The station said the justices voted 5 to 3 at the court's secret, weekly conference last Friday to deny the three men's request for review. An announcement of the decision is being delayed by Chief Justice Warren Burger because he hopes to convince two other justices to switch their vote in favor of hearing the case, the report said.

Mitchell and Haldeman have remained free pending their appeal to the high court.

Ehrlichman, also convicted of conspiracy in the so-called "Plumbers" burglary of the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist, entered the Swift Trail Federal Prison Camp at Stafford, Ariz., last October to begin serving his sentences, pending appeal. He was sentenced to 20 months to five years in the Plumbers case.

A COURT spokesman said he did not expect any comment from Burger on the report.

Mitchell, Haldeman and Ehrlichman were convicted Jan. 1, 1975, and each was sentenced to 30 months to eight years in prison for conspiracy, obstruction of justice and giving false testimony under oath in what prosecutors said was an attempt to cover-up the Watergate scandal.

Quoting Supreme Court sources, National Public Radio reporter Nina Totenberg said the three justices who voted to review the case were Burger and Justices Harry Blackmun and Lewis Powell Jr., all appointed to the high court by former President Richard Nixon.

The report said Justice William Rehnquist, another Nixon appointee, reportedly disqualified himself from the case, citing a close friendship with Mitchell.

The story said Burger is holding the case for reconsideration during today's conference on cases.

The report said Burger hopes to sway Justices John Paul Stevens and Bryon White to change their votes.

Russian names now popular, 'Ivan' and 'Natasha' in vogue

MOSCOW (AP) — The enthusiastic days when people named their children after power stations, tractors and heroes of communism are fading, and Soviet parents are going back to the traditional Ivan and Natasha, officials said Thursday.

The generation of people named Electrification, Tractor, Turbine and Hydrostation is growing older, and Ninel (Lenin spelled backwards) and October (the month of the Russian Revolution) are already whitehaired and paunchy.

Some of the children themselves have modified their names in response to changing times. One man whose parents called him Melsor (an acronym for Marx Engels Lenin Stalin October Revolution) has dropped the "s".

Administrators begin to sell benefits of energy program

WASHINGTON (AP)—Administration officials on Thursday began the process of convincing a reluctant public and a hesitant Congress that President Carter's tough energy program was good for them.

Meanwhile, the House took the first step toward moving the wide-ranging energy program through Congress by unanimously voting to establish a 37-member special committee to handle the program.

In the Senate, Majority Leader Robert Byrd said the Finance Committee would handle the tax aspects of Carter's plan while the Energy and Natural Resources Committee takes over all other portions of the proposal.

ADMINISTRATION efforts to dispel public doubts that Carter's cure is too bitter to bear began early, when the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency told reporters at a breakfast meeting that the energy program can be carried out without sacrificing environmental standards.

Efforts continued with Budget Director Bert Lance telling a news briefing that the program could have a temporary adverse impact on the economy but the long term effect would be beneficial.

"If it's not beneficial, it certainly won't be detrimental," he said.

The Energy Research and Development Administration announced plans to reshape its budget to step up solar and coal research.

EVEN President Carter took time to tell reporters he expected the standby gas tax proposal—possibly the most controversial portion of his plan—to pass Congress.

EPA Administrator Douglas Costle said phasing in major elements of the energy plan over several years, as Carter has called for, will allow time to develop and install the equipment necessary to continue to improve air quality.

"There may be some areas of the country where, for public health reasons, it may be difficult to burn coal," he added. "It's going to vary from place to place."

But he said that one side effect of the program would be less pollution since "most pollution is the result of inefficient use of raw materials."

LANCE acknowledged that the energy program should boost the inflation rate by one-quarter to one-half per cent a year for the next four years. It would increase the federal deficit by $1.2 billion to $2.6 billion in fiscal year 1978 and by $7 billion to $15 billion through 1985, mainly as the result of increasing the nation's strategic oil stockpile.

But he said the program probably would have no effect on the gross national product, the measure of how much goods the country produces.

Rape: angry campus reacts to alleged rape; athletes suffer, women tell of past incidents

By ROY WENZL
Editor
and MEG BEATTY
Staff Writer

The K-State campus has been in an uproar since a coed reported she had been gang-raped by five football players March 30 in the Athletic Residence Hall.

Her allegations have prompted other students to speak up, revealing that forced sex and marijuana use in the A-dorm—as in other campus living groups—is not unusual.

Several women have told the Collegian residents of the A-dorm have tried to force them to have sex with them. Athletes claim women are in the all-male hall all hours of the night and tell a story about what some call "a kind of sexual philosophy of a community set apart." They say they are often propositioned by women "infatuated with the jock image."

UNIVERSITY and Athletic Department administrators, for legal reasons, are not commenting about the alleged rape except to say it is under investigation and they can take no action unless the woman involved presses charges. K-State President Duane Acker said in a press conference last Monday that it was up to individuals to protect themselves from rape and not up to the University.

Meanwhile, students, including some A-dorm residents, are claiming that "the athletic dorm is a zoo," and, they allege, this is not the first rape that has occurred there this year. Some students say the coed is only the first woman who had the courage to report it.

When K-State Athletic Director Jersey Jermier was told by the Collegian Friday about other women saying they have had athletes try to force them to have sex with them in the athletic dorm, Jermier said, "Oh, my God. Oh, Christ! Well, I never heard anything like that. I had heard only about the two incidents there."

WHEN ASKED what the other incident was, Jermier replied, "Apparently in February there was this second incident. I don't know anymore details about it, and that's why I wouldn't really want to comment about it. But I sure don't like things like that to happen in any kind."

One woman who graduated from K-State in May 1976 told the Collegian Friday she had been raped in the A-dorm during the fall of 1975 by a white football player. Like the woman who reported she had been raped March 30, the woman graduate said she chose not to press charges because "it would be my word against his," and she didn't think she would stand a chance in court.

Athletic dorm residents say they are taking the heat for the alleged actions of a few men. They claim such incidents are not unusual in the A-dorm or in any living group on campus. They say they are being singled out because they are athletes.

Black athletes, one black football player said, have suffered more than the others because of the rape. The woman involved had said all the men were black.

Meanwhile, the athletic department is trying to promote the sale of season football tickets. Unauthorized signs appeared on campus April 14 saying "Support your local rapists. Buy football tickets." Angry letters-to-the-editor expressing outrage and concern about the incident and about the University and athletic department administrators handling of it have appeared in the same Collegians with large athletic department ads promoting sales. One letter advocated boycotting tickets. And although the athletic department, Jermier said, had not encountered any backlash about the incident from alumni, he said "it sure isn't going to help us any."

CARRIE Henderson, senior in journalism, said she wrote Acker a letter expressing her concern about the alleged rape. Henderson said, "I wrote President Acker that I was concerned about what I was hearing. I didn't think anything was going to be done. I wrote that if the coaches know about what was going on and were getting pressure from the alumni and administration (to cover up) then I would say we deserve a losing football team. It's one thing to cheat on a test or change grades for athletes, but when it concerns a person's life something has to be done. I can't believe the men, leaders of our University, could let this go by. I've loved going to K-State for four years but if this is how our administration is going to run things I'm happy to say I'm leaving."

K-State Extension Service accused of misusing funds

By DICK WILLIS
Staff Writer

The Kansas Farmers Union (KFU) Saturday accused the Kansas State Extension Service of illegally using public money to promote private farm organizations.

Dale Lyon, KFU president, said he sent Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider a letter asking him to conduct an investigation of possible violations of federal and state statutes.

Lyon said the extension service has paid for newspaper advertising and sent letters to farmers urging them to attend meetings of the Beef Development Task Force and the Kansas Livestock Association, both private organizations.

Lyon cited one instance where Smith County Extension Director, Wilbur Dunavan, used federal mailing privileges in February to notify farmers in the county of the annual meeting of the Kansas Grain Sorghum Production Association, also a private organization.

JOHN DUNBAR, K-State extension director, said the law had been "clearly violated" in Smith County and the extension service had corrected it. He said this was the only violation he knew of.

Lyon said the extension service had also hosted meetings for the Kansas Farm Bureau and the Kansas Livestock Association that were favorable to a beef referendum.

Farmers will vote July 1 on the beef referendum, which would establish a value-added tax on all cattle sold in the United States. The revenue would be used for beef promotion and research.

Lyons said the KFU opposes the referendum, while the extension service, K-State President Duane Acker and the Kansas Board of Agriculture favor it, he said.

Dunbar said the extension service does not influence decisions on controversial matters.

Lyon said K-State has an "ulterior motive" in getting the beef referendum passed.

"If it passes, the University will get a lot of research money," Lyon said.

Lyon also said the Kansas Grain Sorghum Producers Association—a private organization—has Waters Hall as an address on its letters.

Richard Vanderlip, K-State agronomy professor and secretary-treasurer of the Kansas Grain Sorghum Producers Association, said the organization's address was given as Waters Hall on letters and the hall is the "main headquarters" of the organization in Kansas.

LYON SAID the Association is a lobbying group. He said the Association's president, Larry Abeldt, lobbied for the beef referendum and had "become very angry when the KFU took an opposing position."

Vanderlip said the Association was formed on March 1, 1977, and it doesn't have a policy on the referendum that he knew of.

"Individuals supported the bill," Vanderlip said. "The officers were in favor if it and tried to encourage its passage."

When asked about the Association's office in Waters Hall, Dunbar said that it was under the experiment station.

Floyd Smith, director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, said it isn't normal for a private organization to be located in a university building.

He said Roger Mitchell, vice president for agriculture, was in charge of that.

Mitchell was unavailable for comment.

Senate faces allocation end with possible money crunch

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

After four allocation sessions, Student Senate will vote Thursday on a complete tentative allocation bill which, if left in its current form, would allocate $4,330 more than Senate's Finance Committee projects will be available next fall.

The committee started work on a recommended budget in February, faced with $124,000 in requests and an estimated $114,000 income.

If the body does not make any cuts in the budget, the excess must be taken out of an $11,000 reserves account or a $7,600 capital outlay fund.

Meg Keeley, Student Governing Association (SGA) financial adviser, said some senate-funded groups may have left-over funds this year, but senate should not count on it. Last year, groups gave $13,000 in unused money back to Senate.

LAST THURSDAY, senate reversed a $2,750 cut in the University for Man (UFM) budget request for a non-student director. The committee had recommended eliminating the position and dropping $400 from the out-of-state travel request.

Correction

The Collegian Friday incorrectly identified Jim Young, junior in finance, as president of Acacia fraternity. Young is president of Alpha Tau Omega.

Senate reinstated the position of a non-student director bringing the groups tentative allocation to $18,061, $2,750 above the $15,311 committee recommendation.

Senate denied the $400 travel request along with a later request for $240 in travel funds.

Ann Swegle, UFM director, said she plans to appeal the decision.

Senate also rejected the committee's recommendation to drop senate-funding to the Women's Resource Center (WRC), which had requested $1,065.

AFTER AN unsuccessful attempt to fund WRC at the requested amount, senate approved a $730 allocation for the center.

Senate amended the committee's $2,325 recommendation for MEChA, a Chicano student organization to $3,175.

The group had originally requested $6,400, $5,000 of which would have gone to bring speakers to K-State. The committee recommended senate only approve a $1,200 honorarium allowance, but the body increased this to $2,000 and added $50 to MEChA's advertising allowance.

By increasing the three groups' budgets, senate now faces a possible deficit of $4,330 if the body takes no funds from reserves.

Senate approved the committee's recommendation that the K-State Parachute Club receive no funding.

THE PARACHUTE club had requested $1,080 to buy new equipment and to send a team to national collegiate competition. About $650 of the request would have replaced club equipment, primarily main canopies—some of which are 20 years old.

After being eliminated from the budget recommendation, the club went before senate to request $300. Senate denied this request.

One of the groups for which finance committee's cut was approved is the Drug Education Center (DEC). The committee recommended eliminating $2,425.50 for an assistant director from DEC's request.

Jeff Morris, DEC assistant director, later said the assistant director could be shared by the FONE, whose full-time assistant director request was also denied. But senate refused to approve this.

Some senators unsuccessfully attempted four times to amend the bill to include some type of assistant director. DEC's allocation stands at $3,799. FONE's allocation is $3,882.

The ID Center requested $12,720 from senate to subsidize the center. The center expects to receive about $1,500 from duplication fees, bringing its budget to $14,220.

Senate tabled the request to look into charges that the new form of ID cards did not last more than a year.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ETHIOPIA—Ethiopia's leftist military rulers announced Sunday they had closed the consulates of the United States and five other countries in war-torn Eritrea province.

The order came a day after the government closed down four other U.S. facilities in Ethiopia, saying they contradicted the ideology of the Ethiopian socialist revolution.

No reasons were given immediately for shutting down the consulates. Guerrillas of the Eritrean Liberation Front, ELF, who have been fighting for 16 years to win independence for Eritrea, claimed earlier this month they were closing in on Asmara, the Eritrean capital, and would "liberate" the province this year.

A radio announcement said the American facilities contradicted the goals of the Ethiopian socialist revolution and its "non-aligned" foreign policy.

OLYMPIA, Wash.—Governors of several northwestern and north-central states urged Sunday that the state of Washington become a transshipment point for Alaska crude oil to their landlocked refineries.

The governors' resolution indicated a distrust of the Canadian government and proposals that Alaska crude be funneled to the Midwest through an existing Canadian pipeline.

The governors said they believed it was strictly up to Washington state to determine where an oil port should be located. Washington Gov. Dixy Lee Ray said adoption of the resolution did not mean she was ready to set aside the Atlantic Richfield Co.'s plan to ship crude from Alaska to Washington and then via pipelines including Canadian ones to midwestern states.

STAVANGER, Norway—American experts will try Monday to cap a runaway oil well that has been spewing millions of gallons of crude oil into the North Sea.

Authorities said the 12-mile-long slick flowing from the offshore oil rig was expected to remain far from the coast for the next two days, giving antipollution vessels time to clean up much of the oil before it reaches Danish and Norwegian beaches.

"I am more optimistic about avoiding a major pollution of coastal areas," said Norway's environmental affairs minister, Gro Harlem Brundtland, after flying over the slick Sunday.

WASHINGTON—Energy will dominate congressional action and debate this week as a Congress already divided on major elements of President Carter's energy plan begins to grapple with the actual legislation.

Even the tax revision bill, on which the Senate resumes work Monday, has been linked to the energy issue, with Senate Republicans insisting that if Congress plans to raise energy taxes it should lower income taxes.

Carter proposed a standby gasoline tax of up to 50 cents a gallon, new taxes on gas-guzzling big cars and rebates for fuel-efficient little ones, higher prices for oil and natural gas, and tax breaks for home insulation and solar energy.

WASHINGTON—Some areas with severe air pollution problems, such as California and New York City, likely will be exempt from mandatory conversion to coal under President Carter's new energy program, White House energy adviser James R. Schlesinger said Sunday.

Schlesinger said the goal to achieve one billion tons of coal production by 1985 probably will not mean a lessening of environmental standards.

"We are attempting to avoid any rollback of environmental protection," he said. "But some states have unique problems. Air pollution is a far more serious problem in California than it is elsewhere."

Carter's energy message reflects pleas of Americans

WASHINGTON (AP)—When Peggy Clark and Mary Ann Aiello came to Washington from Rockford, Ill., they hoped to present directly to President Carter their own energy proposal and petitions signed by 25,000 persons.

They spent 75 minutes with Midge Costanza, the President's assistant for public liaison, and an aide to James Schlesinger, the President's energy chief. The Carter administration's energy policy was in its final weeks of preparation.

Now Mrs. Clark says, "I really feel many of the things in the President's energy policy were things we wrote down as private citizens."

The energy policy presented to the nation, last week by Carter reflected the work of a wide range of people. They stretched from Schlesinger and others working in the White House to people around the country like Peggy Clark and Mary Ann Aiello who, in letters, telephone calls and meetings, made their thoughts known.

It is difficult to say whether the final energy policy was affected by the telephone calls and letters written to the White House by Mrs. Clark and Miss Aiello or by their eventual trip to Washington.

SEVEN THINGS NOT TO DO THIS SUMMER.

Summer can be fun if you know a few common things to avoid doing.

1. Do not swim at any beach where they have loudspeakers playing the soundtrack from "Jaws."
2. Do not, under any circumstances, try to pick up a cow.
3. Do not answer any want ad for a summer job that sounds too good to be true — unless you enjoy selling steak knives.
4. Do not tell your parents that, after graduation, you have decided on an exciting career in motel management.
5. Do not accept a date from anyone wearing a green leisure suit and roller skates.
6. Do not, under any circumstances, attempt to feed your pet gerbil a boa constrictor.
7. Do not forget the one word for beer. As your Dean of Beer, I can think of nothing more important for you to remember. So have fun, have Schlitz, and I'll see you next fall.

THERE'S JUST ONE WORD FOR BEER.

AND YOU KNOW IT.

Opinions

Articles appearing on this page do not necessarily represent the entire Collegian staff or the Board of Student Publications.

There is no place like home

The University encourages students who live in dorms to feel right at home—but the rules are not the same.

Too often, students are victims of an unwarranted sense of security. Dorm rooms do not belong to their occupants, they are leased. Because of this, a different set of rules apply, particularly in the areas of search and seizure.

THE UNIVERSITY maintains the right to enter any room to perform custodial functions. If by chance they discover something illegal they may submit it as evidence in court. This means that if a janitor or other official sees some marijuana lying about he may confiscate it and give it to the police.

Officials can also inspect rooms if they suspect the occupants are violating university regulations. Peculiar odors are considered evidence enough for such an inspection.

The rights of students concerning search and seizure are unclear in Kansas, because lawsuits have not established those rights as in other states. Until a case comes before the court, no one really knows.

FOR THIS reason K-Staters should beware. Any janitor is potentially an undercover agent. Before a police officer may enter your home he must have a warrant, or your permission and he must inform you of your rights if he intends to arrest you. On campus your rights concerning search and seizure are not so cut and dried.

Before you sign next year's contract read it carefully. When your rights are unclear you are entitled to know in what areas problems may arise. Ask questions. Add in the meantime remember, there is no place like home.

Graduation exercise symbolic

The practicality of a college education is exceeded only by the practicality of graduation exercises.

In order to go through the ceremony, seniors must purchase souvenir caps and gowns. It would apparently be cheaper and less wasteful to rent gowns, but everybody knows that a souvenir is an absolute necessity.

It will be up to the graduates to find some practical use for their caps and gowns after the ceremony.

Finding a use for the gowns could be a real challenge. A graduate might try putting the gown on and climbing to the top of a big hill. Then he could spread his arms jump and hang-glide all the way to the bottom. This could be rather hazardous, however, as the gowns appear to be made out of flimsy material.

THOSE GRADUATES planning on joining satanic cults should have no trouble finding uses for the gowns.

Others might consider starting an anti-Klu Klux Klan club and wearing their gowns while they burn Schlitz cans in front of the homes of rednecks.

Buying a white collar and becoming a minister would be another possibility.

Graduates planning to work in western Kansas should have no trouble finding a use for their caps. There is a big water shortage developing out there. The caps are flat on top and should aid the graduates in their attempts to carry water jugs over long distances. Who says college graduates don't use their heads?

GIVEN A college education and a graduation cap, it is not beyond the realm of possibility that some creative graduate might invent the square Frisbee. Just think how much fun it would be to throw a square Frisbee around Ahearn at halftime.

The tassel might be given to a graduate's favorite dancer at Sunny Sam's.

Who knows, maybe there really is a practical reason for asking seniors to buy their caps and gowns. Perhaps there are so few jobs available that all graduates will be staying to get their Masters degrees. Then they could wear them again.

IT IS very symbolic that graduates will have their degrees conferred upon them in mass—two colleges at a time. What better way is there to symbolize the University institution as a degree mill?

Oh well, that really isn't important. When graduates pick up their diploma folders, they are going to discover the folders are empty, anyway. Diplomas won't be mailed out until late June.

Empty diploma folders are also deeply symbolic. They symbolize the declining value of a college education. As a journalism student graduating with high honors, I have accumulated a bulletin board full of rejection letters and a possible job offer in western Kansas for about $125 a week.

In the classroom they teach that free press refers to newspapers having no prior restraint.

In the real world, I have discovered that free press refers to starting salaries for journalism graduates.

At least if I accept the job, I will have a square cap to carry my water jugs on. That is some consolation.

Letters to the editor

Mistaken ancestry

Editor,

The Collegian article "Sorority reactions to race issue differ" Thursday referred to one Caucasian member of Delta Sigma Theta. Many readers have assumed that I am that member. I wish to point out that Mexican Americans are mestizos (a mixture of Spanish and Indian ancestry). I do not consider myself Caucasian.

Discrimination label unfair

Editor,

I'm writing in reference to the article in the April 21 Collegian by Velina Houston concerning the race discrimination that supposedly exists in "white sororities." I felt it very unfair that Ms. Houston stereotyped the "white sorority" system because it, as a whole, has never to my knowledge come up against formally rushing a black woman. Therefore, in my opinion, and I feel it to be a general consensus, we are not being given a fair chance.

I will agree that the incident at the University of Kansas caused us to open our eyes but only because we at K-State have not been subjected to the same circumstances that caused the unfortunate situation. Therefore are we being fairly judged on our membership standards?

After bringing the issue before my sorority, we all agreed that we would not judge a girl on her color. Her other qualities would be our main objective in her selection for membership. We base our opinions on her personality, scholastic standing, outside interests and activities and other basic criteria.

PANHELLENIC, when sending out information concerning rush, sends it to every freshman woman enrolled at K-State regardless of race. These women themselves make the choice to go through rush or not. Also the slides panhellenic uses in its summer orientation program that "have only pictures of white girls" on them are not the only ones used. Some of the slides do show members of the black sororities, both by themselves and intermixing with the other panhellenic sororities. Cheryl McAfee who was interviewed and quoted in Houston's article happens to be in one of the slides. Obviously, some of the information presented by Houston is a total misconception of the facts.

I will not say that a black woman would not be dropped from our rushing list, but it would not be because of her color. After all, look at the number of white women whom we drop and those who drop us simply because they are not what we are looking for and vice versa.

This whole situation causes me to raise one question, if and when a black woman goes through formal rush, and if and when she is pledged by a "white sorority" will it be because she is an outstanding person or because she is black and we as the "white sororities" are afraid not to pledge her?

Senate bill regulates council funds

By BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to curb college council misspending, Student Senate Thursday approved a resolution outlining council spending regulations.

Each council receives $1.50 from full-time and 42 cents from part-time students enrolled in that college. The councils, in turn, allocate the funds to various college organizations.

SEVERAL instances have occurred in the past in which college councils have spent funds in questionable ways, said Skip Boyd, student senate vice-chairman and resolution sponsor. Until this bill was passed, no set regulations had been established for councils' spending, Boyd said.

"Design Council has a house on 17th and Anderson that is used for studios," he said. "They bought about sixty gallons of paint, some lumber and other building supplies to make this house into studios."

"Some of the left over paint was used for painting inside of Seaton, and we (senate) felt any paint used inside of Seaton should be paid for by the University."

One section of the resolution prohibits councils from spending funds on capital improvements or equipment.

The resolution states council funds must be spent on activities or programs beneficial to the entire college.

"That's hardly an activity of program," he said, referring to the Seaton painting.

Another section states no money may be spent on telephones or telephone calls unless they are for organization business.

"Architecture and Design College Council had a phone installed in a room and this room was supposed to be locked at all times," Boyd said. "As far as I understood, the only person who had a key was that college council president."

"A number of copies of the key were made and given out to people—some of whom were not even on design council."

BOYD said the phone was probably used for personal calls, because design council was budgeted $80 for telephone expenses that year and spent $140.

Architecture and Design Council President Tom Hollinberger said he had heard the council had a telephone two or three years ago, but it had since been removed.

"I know it (misspending) never happened since I've been on the council," Hollinberger said. "I don't have a key to any room with a phone and, as far as I know, the only place that has one is the main office. The only person with a key to that is the secretary."

Other council funds have been spent on equipment, Boyd said, and cited Graduate College Council as an example.

"Graduate Council went out and bought a whole bunch of equipment right before the end of the fiscal year," he said. "This was for something downtown that they called a resource center. To me it sounds more like a lounge."

Boyd said equipment Graduate Council purchased included a stereo, a vacuum cleaner, lamps and various albums.

He said the Student Governing Association financial adviser and the assistant dean of students have been able to trace everything except the albums.

"They (the council) were allowed to keep all this because they weren't violating any spending regulation when they did it," he said.

"I think it was kind of sneaky that they waited until the end of the fiscal year. I don't think the whole graduate council was even there—just a couple of graduate students and their adviser."

FORMER Graduate Council President Dick Entz flatly denied the Council had used funds for these purposes.

"To the best of my knowledge, this did not happen through our council or any organization we fund," Entz said.

Two years ago the Graduate Council had appealed to Senate to use funds for a Graduate lounge, but the request failed, Entz said.

"Our council didn't do this—I know that for a fact," he said. "No business concerning this was enacted during one of our meetings."

The first section of the bill calls for councils to publicize money which students can receive for travel expenses incurred attending conferences. Any available funds must be publicized two weeks ahead of time for instate conferences and six weeks prior to out-of-state conferences, Boyd said.

"Home Economics council has money that they use to give students to go to conferences, but they don't publicize that this money is available," he said. "So we put in the stipulation on how long before a conference this had to be publicized. And this publication has to be recognizable."

The bill also prohibits spending council money for gifts unless the gift benefits the entire college.

Boyd said there are some instances where this would not apply, as in the case of the Education College Council. That council sent flowers to two of its advisers who were seriously injured in an automobile accident.

Boyd said all council spending must go through Meg Keeley, SGA financial adviser, and Pat Bosco, assistant dean of students, as well as the Comptrollers Office, so there is at least three places where spending is checked.

Women tell of forced sex attempts

Acker replied to Henderson in a letter dated April 18. He wrote, "let me assure you that strong and swift action will be taken if persons having knowledge of these alleged happenings come forth with identifications and facts to support criminal charges."

DEAN HESS, director of the KSU Alumni Association, said he has received no phone calls or letters from alumni about the alleged rape.

Some women have expressed fear about visiting friends at the A-dorm while others have said the incident is being "blown out of proportion" and they have no fear of visiting anyone in the dorm. Athletes say they don't like to have girlfriends coming to the A-dorm alone or walk through the halls alone. Since the rape, they say, they have warned girlfriends "don't come alone," and "I'll meet you at the door."

One woman who dates a basketball player said, "After the incident occurred he (her boyfriend) talked to me. He said, 'it occurred. Be careful.' He instructed me not to associate with the three or four people that he had heard were involved in it."

THE WOMAN said she has never been attacked and doesn't know anyone directly who has. She said, "I think a lot of people are taking the rap for what was done allegedly, I guess, by five football players. There are some good guys who are trying to get through college, to produce a winning team."

However, she said, "I think there should be some immediate action taken. I've been really disappointed overall with the whole attitude that has been put up by the Kansas State football program. I expect a lot more from a Big Eight football program than a bunch of 'hush hush, let's ice it over and forget about it.' People demand an answer. There are girls in this University that are frightened to death and every black man on campus that happens to be over six foot, they automatically think he's a rapist. I think to those people the Kansas State football program owes an explanation."

THE BLACK football player questioned said, "A lot of people when I'm talking to them will look at me and ask if I'm an athlete and when I say yes, they say, 'Oh, you must live in the A-dorm.' I say 'yeah,' and they go 'uuuugh' (groan). I understand their feelings but I don't think they understand mine when they do that to me."

"The rape was sickening. You wonder what type of person would do something like that. It takes a weak man, he's weak, if he has to force himself onto a woman."

Deb Barker, sophomore in business and recreation, said she had visited friends and dated football players many times and had never encountered problems.

"It's sad the label has to be put on the whole athletic dorm because you walk up to a group of football players and they'll go 'hey, better watch out, you know we rapists over here...' and stuff like that. Maybe they're not resentful. But it's there. It's on their nerves, I think."

THE MARCH 30 incident is not the first time women have run into trouble at the A-dorm. Several coeds and residents of the dorm questioned by the Collegian said the incident was only "the tip of the iceberg" and told tales describing a "different kind of sexual philosophy of a community set apart." Athletes and woman friends of athletes say there have always been women in the A-dorm at all hours of the night.

Seven K-State coeds said in this

ONE WOMAN said she had been attacked four separate times last year and this year, by both football and basketball players she thought she could trust. One time another resident of the dorm heard her screams and banged on the door until the man let her out, once she was able to unlock the door and run out when the man moved away from her, two other times she talked her way out of the room.

"One of the guys had a mattress on the floor last year. His roommate said that when you throw a woman down on the mattress she can't get up as fast as when you throw them on the beds," she said.

'I started fighting him, tearing up his room, throwing things and screaming...'

semester and in the past residents of the dorm have tried to force them to have sex with them. One of the women said she had had such experiences more than once.

The stories they tell about these incidents all follow the same plot—the men who "grabbed" them were their friends, there was little warning before the men locked the room doors and grabbed them and they were sometimes roughed up before they were able to fight or talk their way out.

"Later that year his roommate locked the door behind me and threw me down on the mattress. Things were getting pretty rough and I finally told him, 'Okay, take 'em off (his clothes) and give me a robe I can wear afterwards.' When he turned his back to reach into his closet I unlocked the door and ran."

ANOTHER woman said she was watching TV with a friend at the A-dorm when he forced her on his bed, held her arms down with his knees and struggled with her to get her overall straps unfastened. She said she hit him in the groin and got away from the bed.

"I hurt him pretty bad and he was so mad I thought he was going to kill me," she said.

"I told him if he was any kind of gentleman he would find me a ride and send me home. The only reason I can think he let me out was he knew I was a friend of Mike Evans and thought he could get in trouble if he didn't let me out."

One woman said the same thing happened to her a year ago with a track athlete.

"I fought him off and he picked me up and threw me across the room," she said. "I couldn't believe how strong he was and he was mad. I started fighting him, tearing up his room, throwing things and screaming and hollering but nobody came. When he finally let me out, there were people standing around, but they hadn't tried to do anything."

"Maybe it was my fault for going over there, but I didn't think anything about it because he was my friend," she said.

"A lot of them (athletes) are like that," one woman said. "When you're over there they start saying things like 'if you don't do this I'm going to knock you up on the side of the head.' What you do is say Well, if you do I'm going to tell everyone because I know you and I know everybody here. You won't get away with it."

SEVERAL athletes questioned about the "sexual philosophy" of the dorm confirmed such incidents were not unusual. They said there were many women in the dorm all the time, "infatuated with the jock image," and wanting to go to bed with athletes.

Chicano representation still unequal...

By DOUG HALL
Collegian Reporter

More Mexican-Americans have found government jobs in the past few years, but they still are not equally represented in government, according to 2nd District Congresswoman Martha Keys.

Keys and George Vega, a case worker in Keys' Topeka office, spoke Saturday following a potluck dinner which was the first event in the Latino Awareness Series sponsored by MEChA, a Chicano student organization.

"There's one thing that I believe in strongly, and that's government must serve all of its citizens.

That's where we've been lacking in the past," Keys said.

"I think all of us know that in the past, policy-making roles have been played by a specific group of individuals," she said. This group was restricted to white males with "basically the same social background."

"Many of our laws reflect this—that not all groups are involved in lawmaking."

"MEXICAN-AMERICANS, women and blacks have gotten two and three times the number of appointments in the present administration than they had previously," she said, pointing out, however, that the number of appointments "was small to start out with."

Much of the increased awareness of Mexican-American problems is the result of student activity, Vega said.

"Seven years ago, almost to the day, 150 Mexican-American students walked out of Topeka High School," he said. This student protest prompted "a new involvement with people of our group."

"There's a new cultural identity surge throughout Kansas, and particularly in Topeka," Vega said. "We're finally headed in the right direction."

KEYS SAID equality for Mexican-Americans will require continued efforts in making their problems known.

"We see many minority groups complaining that they aren't given the same treatment," she said. "They should continue. That's what's needed."

She spoke favorably about a proposed amnesty program for illegal Mexican aliens in the United States.

"It seems to me that when these people are here and working and sometimes exploited by employers, we've got a responsibility to do something about them," Keys said.

...Carter's energy proposal meets 'approval,' Keys says

By DOUG HALL
Collegian Reporter

President Jimmy Carter's energy proposals released last week have met with "general approval" from members of Congress, even though there is some opposition to specific proposals, Congresswoman Martha Keys said Saturday.

Keys made the comments following her MEChA-sponsored speech in Manhattan.

"I think his (Carter's) goals are shared and understood by the members of Congress," she said. "I for one will work hard to reach some of those goals."

"There are parts of his proposals that probably won't pass Congress, but if they don't, it's because something else has been substituted that will achieve the same goal, or in some cases something that would maybe do a better job," Keys said.

Keys said she doesn't agree with Carter's proposal to tax gas-guzzling automobiles. Instead, she favors requiring all autos to meet minimum gas efficiency standards.

"I don't think anyone should be able to drive a fuel-inefficient car, just because they can afford to pay the tax on it," Keys said.

"Making these cars illegal is a lot better than Mickey Mousing around with taxes."

Although Carter's proposals must pass through Congress, Congress alone couldn't have prepared an energy policy, she said.

"It takes the President to be able to make a whole wide comprehensive proposal like this and to provide leadership for it."

"We're going to get an energy policy," Keys said. "And it's going to be rough."

Pakistan government jails 48; anti-Bhutto demonstration set

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP)—The government jailed 48 leading opposition politicians Sunday in a counteroffensive against a six-week-old campaign of street protests against Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Most leaders of the opposition coalition, the Pakistan National Alliance (PNA), are already in jail, and the new wave of arrests included acting PNA chief Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan and other second-echelon leaders in major cities.

The PNA promptly announced that Pir Pagaro, a bearded political leader from southern Sind province, had been named its new acting head.

It also called for a march on the National Assembly Saturday in this capital city to press its demands for Bhutto's ouster and the resignation of other officeholders. The march initially was set for Tuesday, the day the assembly opens a 15-day session.

The PNA is boycotting the assembly, charging that Bhutto's Pakistan People's party rigged the March 7 elections to gain a two-thirds majority in the assembly.

Almost 200 persons have been killed in clashes between rival political groups and security forces since the elections, although no major violence was reported Sunday.

Cats take three from OSU

By TERRY REILLY
Collegian Reporter

K-State wrapped up a four-game series with Oklahoma State Sunday afternoon by splitting the final two games. The opening two were won by K-State.

Clutch hitting and solid pitching accounted for Saturday's 2-1 and 4-3 efforts over a team that defeated the Cats three out of four games in the opening series of the season.

K-State won the first game Sunday, 6-5, when designated hitter Tim Pepper doubled in the last inning to drive in the winning runs. O-State won the second game, 5-4.

THE WILDCAT record now stands at 23-13 overall and 6-2 in Western Division play in the Big Eight.

K-State had to win three of the four games to be assured of a spot in the Big Eight post-season tournament and the Cats came through in the pressure series.

Sports

Oklahoma State is 14-22 overall and 1-5 in Big Eight Western Division play. The Cowboys needed a sweep of the series to remain alive for a bid in the tourney.

Head coach Phil Wilson of K-State said the Cats were up for the series and excited about the possibilities of tournament qualification. The top two teams in the division qualify. Currently, Oklahoma is on top.

"We knew we could go on if we could win," Wilson said about the enthusiasm displayed by the team after Saturday's wins.

SATURDAY'S first contest turned into a pitching duel between Dave Tuttle of K-State and Randy Thompson of O-State. But K-State came out on top by a score of two to one.

In the second contest, K-State scored its winning runs in the last inning, when first baseman Craig Cooper hit a shot to the fence in left-center for the come from behind win.

The K-State rally began when pinch hitter Billy Preston singled to left, followed by a Bob Hoenig single.

But O-State pitcher Bobby Green threw wild to second on the attempted force out, pulling the second baseman off the bag.

Tim Pepper followed Moore by grounding to the third baseman who threw home to force Hoenig out at the plate, but the relay to first was not in time to catch Pepper.

With the bases loaded and two outs, Cooper lined a shot to the fence to drive in the winning runs.

Kansas City beats Mariners, 16-1

SEATTLE (AP)—Al Cowens belted a three-run homer and Jim Colburn picked up his third victory as the Kansas City Royals unleashed a 16-hit attack and demolished the Seattle Mariners 16-1 in the first game of a Sunday double-header.

Seattle won the second game, 4-2.

Wildcats finish third in state tournament

K-State's women's softball team finished third in the state tournament at Kays over the weekend.

K-State beat Wichita State, 10-5, in a playoff game Saturday morning to advance to the tournament.

The Cats then beat Benedictine, 5-4. K-State trailed 4-3 in the bottom of the seventh, but Betsy Locke and Susie Norton scored on a fielder's choice and an error for the victory. Nancy Gardner was the winning pitcher.

K-State also beat Pittsburg 4-0 on Saturday. Gardner again was the winning pitcher, throwing a no-hitter and striking out 14. Norton was the game's leading hitter with a single, triple and a home run.

On Sunday, Kansas defeated the Wildcats, 5-0, behind the one-hit pitching of Shelly Sinclair. Locke got the only K-State hit and Gardner was credited with the loss.

Benedictine also beat K-State on Sunday, 7-1. The Cats' only run came in the fifth inning. Margo Jones singled and scored on Kate Schreurs single. Vicky Edmonds and Kim Hammel also got hits for K-State.

Distance medley team paces Cats at relays

K-State's distance medley relay team finished a surprising second Saturday at the Kansas Relays.

The Cats clocked in at 9:42.5 behind champion Arkansas and Irish Olympian Niall O'Shaughnessy.

Greg Glass (4:05.3 mile split), Chris Muehlbach (47.1 440 split), Greg Schlatter (1:53.3 half-mile) and Tim Davis (2:58.37) comprised the relay team.

Frank Perbeck finished fourth in the javelin with a throw of 228-2. The Cats finished sixth in the two-mile relay in a time of 7:32.7 and seventh in the 440 relay in 41.65.

Darryl Bennett and Keith Linck finished 7-8 in the long jump. Bennett leaped 23-5½ and Linck went 23-3¼.

On Friday, Larry Combs (52.18) was sixth in the 400 intermediate hurdles. Vince Parrette (50-5¾) was fourth in the triple jump and Bennett (49-9½) was fifth.

Moeller first in high jump; sets school record at relays

Diane Moeller won the women's high jump at the Kansas Relays Saturday with a leap of 5-6¼, which bettered the school record of 5-6 she set at the WSU Relays.

In the shot put, the Wildcats Christy Tumberger finished second with a throw of 44-10½, while Manhattan native Linda Long was third with 44-5.

K-State freshman ace Cindy Worchester competed against some of the best women in the nation in the 800 meters. Worchester finished sixth in 2:10.9 behind Olympian Wendy Knudson, who won in 2:03.9. Worchester's time, a personal best, was only four-tenths of a second off Teri Anderson's school record.

On Friday, Renee Urish took second in the 1,500 meters in 4:24.7. Joyce Urish was fifth in 4:34.0.

'Rapist stereotype' angers athletes

They also said the A-dorm was a sort of "no man's land" in which women alone in the halls or with men behind unlocked doors were considered "fair game" late at night by many residents.

They said incidents such as "trains," "gang bangs" and A-dorm residents forcing themselves on women in the dorm were not frequent but did happen. Some, however, denied seeing or hearing of such incidents. All athletes questioned said such incidents were as common in K-State residence halls and fraternities as they were in the A-dorm. Several athletes said almost all K-State athletes are propositioned, "especially if they're a starter."

"I've had girls send me notes, call me up at the dorm and come see me and I've never ever seen them in my life," one basketball player said. "They come up to me at parties and start hanging on me, telling me they want to go with me, trying to kiss me, just because I am who I am. What do they think they're doing with stuff like that? Anybody who pulls stuff like that deserves whatever happens to her. A lot of things that happen at the dorm are the women's fault, because they have no business coming over there and doing the things they do."

ONE football player said "some girls are there more than I am."

"The athletes are probably admired because of their abilities and because of the build of their bodies," he said. "A lot of women date jocks just because of the status they have, the prestige. A lot of girls do, especially the freshmen, the younger ones who don't know what's really going on."

Many of the stories about such incidents in the A-dorm, he said, were probably true, "but when you listen to these guys you wonder 'did this really happen or is this guy ego-tripping?'"

Several of the athletes said many athletes become used to getting what they want with women because of the relative ease they have getting sex and sometimes force themselves on women who don't want to do it.

"A lot of freshmen girls come over here at the beginning of the year and, you know, they're really naive," one football player said. "The girl does it because she thinks the guy really likes her but he doesn't. The guys really impress them and they want to go with them."

"Hey, any girl who comes over here and stays after 12:30 gets what she deserves. Everybody over here knows that anybody here after 12:30 is fair game."

"The A-dorm is a zoo," he said. "It's nothing unusual. Every once in a while somebody goes overboard."

"One of the black guys had a date over here one time," he said. "The girl was out in the hall and three guys grabbed her and screwed her. He couldn't do anything to help her because they would have knocked the shit out of him."

ONE basketball player said many of the stories about the A-dorm were only rumors and talk, but he said they did happen and that many women had been mistreated by athletes in the dorm.

"Those football players piss me off, the things they do and the way they treat females," he said. "They have no respect at all for females, the way they treat them is something else."

There are a lot of women who hang around the dorm, he said. "Lots of times there will be some football player who'll get some chick down and screw her and then go tell people, 'Hey, I've got a chick in there and if you want to go in there and f--- her, go ahead.' One would go in and others were standing around waiting. He'd come out and somebody else would go in."

"A lot of the girls who come over don't know what they're getting into at first and some of them get hurt," he said. "A lot of this is the women's fault because they're always over here, wanting to date or screw the athletes. Everybody who lives there knows what it's like and they figure any chick who would come over there late knows what's going on, that if they are there they are fair game, so the guys just move in on them."

"They really ought to provide some kind of protection for the innocent girls," he said. "Plus, the girls should be enlightened as to what's going on there," he said.

ONE FORMER football player who lived in the dorm until this year said he had never heard of any such incidents occurring.

"I'm hearing all these wild rumors now that there are a bunch of morons running around the halls at night and that it's not safe to be there. That's just not true. It's just like any other dorm."

"This is college, man, this doesn't just happen in the A-dorm," said Mike Evans, captain of the basketball team and this season's most valuable player in the Big Eight conference. "I hate people stereotyping the athletes the way they are now, the way everybody is saying we're all rapists or something. These things happen, but they happen in all the dorms."

"I'm aware of things that go on over there, but this whole rape thing is not fair to the men in the A-dorm," one football player said. "I hear of wild things that go on in the residence halls, but it doesn't get out like it does if it happens in the A-dorm."

ONE BLACK football player questioned said black athletes living in the dorm knew as soon as the incident occurred that they were "going to suffer." The woman involved in the March 30 incident said all the men involved were black.

"Some of the guys that live there who were not involved knew (before the campus knew about the rape) what the reaction would be on campus," he said. "They knew they would be stereotyped, that especially black athletes would be stereotyped. They knew that it would be a discredit to their character. Because you lived there and you're a black athlete, you get a piece of what's going on."

"The innocent ones are the ones

ACKER, JERMIE, RAINSBERGER... the University is investigating the March 30 A-dorm incident but not commenting. Meanwhile, the athletic department is pushing hard to promote the sale of season football tickets.

who suffer the most," he said. "Blacks are a minority here and it's just that much harder for them to cope and for women to trust them. They understood they were going to suffer, they knew the whites wouldn't understand and that they would be immediately stereotyped."

"It's a lot of unnecessary pressure to them and it's unjustifiable," he said. "They just say over and over to themselves, 'I'm not that kind of person,' and try to prove their innocence again to themselves."

EVANS SAID the campus reaction to the alleged rape "made him mad."

"Girls used to walk through the A-dorm parking lot right by the dorm. Now, they walk clear around as far away as they can. It makes me mad, the way we've all been stereotyped. You walk past somebody and wave and say 'Hi' and they look at you like 'man, you're a rapist' or something. Man, don't put us in stereotypes."

"A lot of guys are telling me they can't take much more of this," said the former football player. "Some of the younger ones with a few years of eligibility left are saying if anything more happens, they're going to go somewhere else."

Nine Kitten Kruiters, volunteer women who help recruit athletes, said they spend a lot of time in the A-dorm and had never been approached sexually and were not afraid.

"No, never. Sometimes one of the guys asks me to come to his room but it's always been innocent," one black woman said. "I've been alone with dudes in the room lots of times with lots of guys and nobody's ever tried anything."

"THERE ARE a lot of girls over there, though, some of the white girls are like that. Particularly if the guy is a famous recruit. They'll go with them and maybe go to bed with him just so they can say they dated a football player. There are a lot of white girls here who have a thing for black football players."

"This whole rape thing is getting blown way out of proportion," she said.

Several Kitten Kruiters said athletes the football and basketball coaches brought to the campus to recruit sometimes tried to force them to go to bed with them.

They also said coaches sometimes said things about recruiting they thought implied they were to go to bed with the recruits. Eight others questioned, however, said they had had no such experiences.

"They told us that we were supposed to show 'em around town, show them a good time, maybe go out with them. Several of the recruits I had acted as if it's expected of us to go to bed with them," one said.

"A LOT of the girls do it, but many don't and they give us a hard time. That makes us feel bad. I'm telling you, it's a constant clash."

"One of them was very, very difficult and kept saying, 'if you don't I'm going to tell Rainsberger that you're a bad recruiter,' and I shouldn't be over there calling up guys they don't even know."

"The girls, man, tell them Mike Evans says don't go over there unless you want to see a friend, don't go to a guy's room unless you really know him, really trust him," Evans said. "Don't put yourself in a position like that. Protect yourself, don't subject yourself to something that could get you in trouble. And don't go over there seeming like you want to be seduced."

BARKER said the A-dorm "is a mess. I can't tell you whether they tear it up themselves or what it is. That could be the nicest place on campus and yet it is ruined. There are water stains all over everywhere."

"Sometimes you can walk through the hall and it reeks so bad of dope that walking through it you just nearly gag," one woman said.

Another woman said she has '...the girls should be enlightened as to what's going on there. A lot of it is the women's fault.'

kept telling him, 'I don't care, that's not what I'm supposed to do and that's not what you're supposed to be coming to school for' and he got very upset."

"They (the coaches) say, 'do everything you can to make them stay,'" one Kruiter said. "The first thing you'd think from the way they say it is that we're supposed to go to bed with them, but they don't imply it too much. Really, I don't think they are really implying it."

TWO basketball players said solutions to the problem would not be easy.

"All they can do is have the proctors watch out and if some guys seem like they're getting out of line have them disciplined by the coaches," one said. "Plus, the girls should be enlightened as to what's going on there. A lot of it is the women's fault. They want to get next to the athletes. They shouldn't be doing that, they seen people smoking marijuana in the A-dorm.

"It is ever present," she said. "There are dealers over there. Everyone knows who deals."

"There are certain corridors that you can actually see the smoke drifting out from underneath the doorway. It's no secret. It's used by the majority of residents out there," she said.

How many?
"I'd venture to say 70 per cent," she said.

ONE football player said of the athletic dorm, "It's a zoo. Everybody knows that. They (guys) think the A-dorm is a dump. It's a fire hazard. There is dangerous wiring all around."

"It's really kind of sad. When I was a little kid I always wanted to come to K-State and play sports. I always watched the Vince Gibson Show. But now that I've been here, it's a big letdown. K-State's athletic program is just a hole."

Indian's plight must be noticed

By ANTHONY SEALS
Collegian Reporter

Non-Native Americans need to become more aware of the plight of the American Indian, according to Lucky Hollander, representative of the Native American Solidarity Committee (NASC).

Hollander, who is presently serving on the NASC Coordinating Committee, presented a slide show on the history of Native American resistance and spoke of the origins of NASC Saturday in the K-State Union.

Comprised mostly of non-Indians supporting Indian causes, NASC was organized in August of 1975.

"Most of the people active in NASC were involved at one time or another in the Wounded Knee Legal Defense Office Committee," Hollander said.

The committee was established after the Wounded Knee occupation of February 1973.

"As most of you probably know, from that occupation came hundreds of indictments and charges against Indian people, though none against the U.S. government and its offices," Hollander said.

SHE SAID because most of these charges were unjustified, legal help was solicited immediately. Lawyers and "unlicensed legal people" from across the country responded, to deal with the volume of legal work which resulted.

"What we (NASC) needed to do was take their (Native Americans) leadership and raise those issues to white people—a task that was almost impossible for them to do," Hollander said.

She said NASC began seeking feedback about their organization and "got overwhelming support".

NASC had its first national conference in December of 1975 and there are now 25 chapters and seven pre-chapters in the U.S.

"None of these chapters are predominantly Indian," Hollander said. "We don't want to be put in the position of speaking for Indian people, but rather raising the issues of Native People to the white community in ways that the white community can begin to evaluate that movement."

Lobbyists try to restrict federal abortion funds

WASHINGTON (AP)—With efforts on behalf of a constitutional amendment restricting abortions stymied, the anti-abortion lobby is not trying to eliminate government funding of social service programs which make the operations possible.

Members of Congress who oppose abortion are being encouraged to attach to funding bills for these programs amendments that would prevent the use of federal money for abortions.

ALTHOUGH ABORTION opponents are dissatisfied with this piecemeal approach, they seem to have few other options. The House and Senate subcommittees with jurisdiction over constitutional amendments show no signs of willingness to act on an anti-abortion amendment.

A recent example of the tactic occurred last week when the House Judiciary Committee was considering a three-year extension of the Legal Services Corporation, which provides legal counsel for the poor.

The legislation authorizing the agency prohibits use of its funds to compel a person or institution to perform an abortion against moral or religious convictions. It also banned using funds to provide legal assistance toward getting a non-therapeutic abortion.

But the bill under consideration omitted the anti-abortion section.

Applications ready for sorority rush

Upperclass women interested in becoming a part of K-State's greek system may pick up applications for formal sorority rush at the panhellenic office in Holtz Hall.

Applications are due Monday, July 25, in the panhellenic office and women must pay a housing fee one-week for their stay in a residence hall during the rush from Thursday, Aug. 18 to Tuesday, Aug. 23.

Formal rush is open to any freshman, transfer or upperclass woman who has either an overall or a grade point from the previous semester of 2.5.

Because more sorority houses might be open for upperclass pledges next fall, the outlook for upperclass women is good, said Barb Robel, panhellenic adviser.

"To insure housing, upperclass rushees should already have a residence hall contract," Robel said. "Then, if they pledge a house with room for them to move in, they may cancel their contract—providing there is a waiting list for residence hall space."

There also may be some houses which will pledge upperclass women but ask them to live outside the house if there isn't space available in the house, she said.

Women's Resource Center to begin four-day program

A four-day program designed to inform students of different issues related to changing sex roles and ways to deal with them begins today.

"This is a week for both men and women," said Ann Benson, director of Women's Resource Center (WRC), which is sponsoring Women's Awareness Week.

Different themes have been chosen for each day which will be carried out through films, debates, panel discussions and speakers during the week.

FOR TODAY'S topic, Women and the Law, a movie, "Women's Rights in the U.S." will be shown at 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theater.

"It examines society's reaction to women's changing roles from cavemen to the present," said Deb McNeil, assistant director of WRC.

A debate on the Equal Rights Amendment will be at 7 p.m. in the Union Little Theater.

Tuesday's topic is "Sex Roles in Christianity" and the film, "Women in Catholicism," will be shown at 12:30 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theatre. A lecture and panel discussion on the topic will be at 7 p.m. in the Union Little Theater.

Wednesday is "Sexuality Day" and a series of presentations will be sponsored by the University for Man and WRC.

The workshops, which will continue from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Union room 212, include: "Is sex a four letter word?", "Have you come a long way baby?", "Sexual decision-making" and "Issues for long-term relationships."

The workshops will explore sex roles through the socialization process, responsible decision-making toward sex and birth control and alternate styles of relationships.

A SLIDE SHOW, "How the Media Affects our Sexuality," will illustrate how women have been portrayed through advertisements from the 1900s to today and will be shown at 10:30 a.m. in Union room 212.

The Wednesday night panel discussion is "Social Rape" at 7 p.m. in Union Room 212.

"It's not the kind of rape where someone jumps out of the bushes and assaults you," McNeil said. "Social" rape is being raped by a man one has met. The panel will discuss why women get into that situation and will present assertive exercises to help avoid it.

On Thursday, Careers Day, a slide show will be presented from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on the second floor of the Union. It will focus on non-traditional careers for women.

Nan Oser, assistant director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, will give a lecture on "Women in the Work Force" at 7 p.m. in Union room 212.

Graduation cards due this Friday

Seniors wishing to participate in commencement exercises will have until Friday, April 29 to return their commencement information cards to the office of Admissions and Records, according to Doug Hurley, assistant director of Admissions and Records.

The cards mailed last week requested a return by last Friday, April 22. Because of a delay in obtaining address labels the letters were mailed late, so seniors will have the extra week to complete the information.

World oil reserves greater than Carter thinks, U.N. says

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Estimates compiled by experts at a U.N. conference disagree with President Carter's televised warning that "we are now running out of gas and oil." They hold that the world probably has enough of both for another hundred years.

A newly issued summary report of last summer's conference says the dozens of specialists who attended generally agreed that oil and gas from conventional sources "would last at least until about the time period 2020-2030."

The summary said the consensus at the conference was that, as rising prices make it economical to tap new sources, "additional petroleum and gas resources would most probably be available, albeit at a substantially higher cost the period of transition to the use of renewable energy sources, even if this transition period should last a hundred years or more."

About 70 geologists, engineers, economists and systems analysts gathered under the auspices of the U.N. Institute for Training and Research and the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis.

The summary was the first report of the results of the conference, held in Laxenburg, Austria, last July 5-16. The full report is to be issued May 1.

The U.N. experts also took a different view of the outlook for oil than did the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) in a report made public before Carter's TV speech last Monday. The speech was the opening gun of Carter's campaign for a long-range United States energy conservation and development policy.

The U.N. summary said the oil experts' papers and discussions found that oil would remain the world's most important hydrocarbon source of energy "for many years to come."

Among reasons cited for the favorable outlook were:

—Resources remain to be discovered, since "most of the world, particularly in the developing countries, offshore and on the ocean floor, has never been systematically explored for oil and gas."

—The world's oil industry will be able to get more and more of the oil and gas out of the ground thanks to its "ceaseless technical advance."

—As prices for crude oil or gas increase, small fields or hard-to-get deposits whose development is not economical now may become worthwhile. For example, more oil may be produced from so-called unconventional sources, such as oil-bearing shale and tar sands.

—Similar circumstances may result in the taking of gas from so-called gas hydrates, or ice, like crystals of methane and water molecules in the permafrost of the far north, or from "geopressure" zones—rockbound natural hot-water reservoirs deep in the earth's crust where the natural "cracking" of petroleum has produced methane.

Grain association may leave campus

By DICK WILLIS
Staff Writer

Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider said Monday he will ask the Kansas Grain Sorghum Production Association to move out of Waters Hall if it is a private grain promotion organization and if it has its headquarters located there.

The Attorney General's office received a letter from Dale Lyon, president of the Kansas Farmers Union, Monday. In the letter, Lyon accused the Association of using Waters Hall as its headquarters and the K-State Extension Service of being biased in favor of the beef referendum.

THE BEEF referendum would establish a value-added tax on all cattle sold in the United States. The revenue would be used for beef promotion and research.

Richard Vanderlip, K-State agronomy professor and secretary-treasurer of the Kansas Grain Sorghum Producers Association, said Sunday Waters Hall was the "main headquarters" of the Association.

Schneider said the bias charge would not be investigated because it is a matter of opinion and not subject to any violation of state law.

He also said, presently, he does not plan on pressing criminal charges or asking the Association to pay back rent for using state facilities, regardless of what his investigation shows.

Vanderlip said the Association is an organization of producers and the Association's function is to "increase market-development, conduct research and provide information."

ROGER MITCHELL, vice president for agriculture, said other private organizations at K-State similar to the Kansas Grain Sorghum Producers Association included the Kansas Irrigators Association, Kansas Veterinary Medicine Association, Society of Professional Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers, Kansas Nut Growers and the Kansas Horticultural Society.

Mitchell also said there are associations for the grain sorghum, corn and soybeans. All of the organizations have offices at K-State.

The heads of these organizations are either K-State faculty members or extension personnel.

John Dunbar, K-State extension director, said organizations at K-State are educational and do not lobby. He said, however, that the situation is "tricky."

Dunbar said he was preparing a list of K-State faculty and extension personnel who are officers of farm organizations.

Barry Flinchbaugh, special assistant to the president and public affairs extension economist, said it is possible to be the officer of a private farm organization and not have its policy affect you, but that "it is difficult."

Mitchell said corn, grain sorghum and soybean associations are being considered for the value-added tax similar to the one beef producers will vote on July 1.

K-STATE'S "relationship with these organizations is appropriate," Mitchell said. "We have had a long history of these kinds of organizations at land grant universities."

Lyon has accused the sorghum association of being a lobbying group. Mitchell said he "is not aware that it is a lobbying group."

At a news conference Monday, K-State President Duane Acker

Acker proposes measures for campus rape prevention

By ROY WENZL
Editor

K-State President Duane Acker Monday announced a four-point program to deal with or prevent future rapes and assaults on the K-State campus and called upon individuals harmed or threatened on the campus to report the crimes to University and Riley County authorities.

Asked if he was calling on victims of crimes other than the woman who reported she had been gang-raped in the K-State Athletic Residence Hall, Acker said yes.

"Rape is a criminal offense," he said. "Anyone who has been the victim of a such an offense should come forward with the facts. Failing to do so undermines the judicial system of the country as well as the judicial system of the University."

HE SAID later that his statement also meant witnesses to crimes, as well as victims, should come forward and that men as well as women, knowing of such crimes, should come forward.

Acker, in his regular weekly press conference, made his statement in response to reports that other women visiting the A-dorm had been raped or had encountered athletes trying to force them to have sex with them. Before the press conference, he met behind closed doors with several University officials, including the vice-presidents for business, academic and student affairs and Athletic Director Jersey Jermier. Jermier and Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, later attended the press conference.

With the four-point program, Acker is establishing:

—an educational program for University personnel such as in campus residence halls "who could be in contact with potential rape victims," on campus. The program will teach personnel to deal with someone who has been sexually assaulted. Robert Sinnett, director of the mental health section of Lafene Student Health Center, and Margaret Nordin, associate director of the Center for Student Development, will be in charge of the program. The program will work in conjunction with FONE and members of the general student body, Acker said.

—a program to study what physical facilities the University might need to better prevent rape or assault on campus. Diane Rausch, director of K-State's affirmative action, will head this program.

—Vice president Peters has been appointed to draw up a statement of confidentiality, to outline what information a victim of a crime gives will be kept confidential. Richard Seaton, University attorney, is to draw up a statement outlining victims' rights.

—the fourth program began several days after the March 30 incident, Jermier said. It involves moving A-dorm resident assistants to dorm wings where, Acker said, "there have been complaints." It also has put an assistant coach on duty at night to keep watch in the dorm.

Acker said victims or witnesses to crimes on campus should report them to the county attorney, Security and Traffic police, and Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development.

He repeated earlier statements about the March 30 incident, saying Security and Traffic police were investigating it, that the case "was in the hands of the county attorney," and that until charges are brought in court against individuals the University can take no action against individuals involved.

Lyon claims illegal use of K-State building space said there is no definite line between a lobbying organization and an educational organization. According to Acker, the University has a responsibility to offer alternatives. He said it has been traditional for the University to get involved in setting up organizations.

Lyon also said the extension service had broken the law by paying for advertisements and sending official letters notifying farmers of private farm organization meetings.

Mary Hanfelt, Secretary to the Attorney General, said Schneider will "have to investigate that part."

Lyon said David Smith, Jackson county agricultural extension agent, had used an official letter to notify farmers of the annual meeting of the Kansas Livestock Association.

Smith told the Collegian Monday there were two sentences in the newsletter pertaining to the Kansas Livestock Association meeting.

He said the rest of the newsletter was about extension programs.

WHEN asked if this was against the law, Smith said "I will have to Apodaca to speak at lecture, forum

Jerry Apodaca, governor of New Mexico, will be a convocation speaker at 10:30 this morning in McCain Auditorium.

Apodaca, one of the nation's first Chicano governors, also will hold an open forum for students, faculty and the public at 1:30 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall.

The 42-year-old Democrat was elected to a four-year term as governor of New Mexico in 1974. Prior to that he had served for eight years in the New Mexico Senate.

A native of Las Cruces, Apodaca was graduated from the University of New Mexico in 1957. He taught and coached at an Albuquerque high school for three years before going into business for himself. He formed his own insurance agency and served as president of the Family Shoe Center of Las Cruces and Albuquerque.

talk to Dunbar (director of the Cooperative Extension Service).

"I didn't think it was against the law when I wrote it," he said.

Acker said he was "simply surprised to see the story" in the newspaper. He said he told Lyon to come and visit him but that neither he nor Mitchell had talked with Lyon.

Lyon said he had talked with people at K-State about bias on the beef referendum.

"We made an earlier attempt to warn people at K-State," Lyon said. "They were friendly but the people in charge either didn't take us seriously or didn't know what was going on."

Lyon said he wrote John Dunbar about private farm organizations being headquartered at K-State and using mailing privileges.

Lyon said Dunbar mailed him a handbook on federal mailing laws.

LYON said the main problem is collusion between the extension service and farm organizations to promote the value-added tax. He said it is political.

"We have never been offered a chance to present an opposing view and we have an opposing view," Lyon said. "I would say that the extension people and farm organizations are too closely aligned."

"The extension service is holding meetings all over Kansas," he said.

"There is nothing wrong with that, but only one side is presented. It is plain old promotion and collusion."

Lyon said it is not right that private farm organizations have offices at K-State.

"If they have a right to free offices, so should the KFU," Lyon said. "The only reason we limited action to mailing was that it was the only thing we could prove."

"It should have been called a long time ago because it has become the accepted way of doing things," he said. "It is tragedy that a great institution would lower themselves to where they are only promoters of schemes of private groups," Lyon said.

Kruiter club boosts football, acts as 'glorified pep club'

By MEG BEATTY
Staff Writer

Since Coach Ellis Rainsberger arrived on the scene at K-State last year, women who help recruit football players have done more than change their name from Gibson Girls to Kitten Kruiters—they have worked to change the whole concept of their organization.

Unlike previous years, Kitten Kruiters this year didn't take just anyone who applied. A panel was formed and 31 of the 80 women interviewed were accepted into the organization.

The applicants were judged on their personality, poise, looks, high moral character, ability to answer questions about K-State and Manhattan, and their ability to handle and get along with people, said Candy Caplinger, president of Kitten Kruiters. "To be a group that is respected and has honor to it, it should be selective," she said.

"We have worked hard to turn Kitten Kruiters into a respectable organization and get away from the Gibson Girl connotation," Caplinger said.

THE PURPOSE of the organization is to help the football program, coaches and recruiting program. Kitten Kruiters help give recruits a different viewpoint of the campus because they get to talk to students, she said.

Kitten Kruiters is sort of a "glorified pep club" and the members make cookies and posters for the football players before each game, she said.

Kitten Kruiters do go out with recruits, "but it is never one on one," Caplinger said.

A football player can ask two

Kitten Kruiters to double date and they may take a recruit to dinner and a show or to Aggieville. "At no time is a Kitten Kruiter and a recruit together just by themselves. They are always with someone else," Caplinger said.

THE COACHES do not imply that Kitten Kruiters should go to bed with the athletes, she said.

Being in Kitten Kruiters "you get to know the players and how much they want to win."

Kitten Kruiters is not funded by the athletic department. When the organization went to the Oklahoma University-K-State game last fall it held a money making project to finance the trip.

Speech to explain Civil Service study

The results of an extensive study on the Kansas Civil Service will be the topic of a noon speech today in Union room 206.

Speaker Debbie High has served as a member of the Personal Management Study Review Group, a governor appointed group to study the Civil Service.

"The study will affect all classified employees, employers, administration and those seeking employment," said Pat Brown, a member of the classified sub-committee of the Commission on the Status of Women, sponsor of the lunch program.

"Debbie will explain the results of the study, which covered all areas of the Civil Service," Brown said.

A question and answer session will follow on issues such as longevity, cost of living raise, job descriptions, merit increases and payroll deductions, Brown said.

WICHITA—The trial of a Wichita State University student on a charge of promoting obscenity opened Monday in Sedgwick County District Court with the selection of a jury.

The defendant, Neil Cook, 21, is charged in connection with exhibiting the film, "The Devil In Miss Jones," at the university Campus Activities Center theater Feb. 10.

Cook's defense counsel filed two motions, one for dismissal of the charge, another for a change of venue.

Judge Robert Stephan rejected the first and took the other under consideration.

KINSHASA, Zaire—The Zaire government claimed on Monday that it has recaptured a key rail town from Katangan invaders in Shaba province and that the rebels were retreating back toward Angola.

Diplomatic sources could not confirm that Mutshatsha had been retaken. When reporters visited Shaba on Sunday the government's front lines were along the Lubudi River, 20 miles east of the town and 50 miles west of the copper-mining center of Kolwezi.

The reporters were told by army officers that it would take several days to retake Mutshatsha because retreating rebels had planted mines along the dirt road parallel to the Benguela railroad that runs through Mutshatsha and on to the Angolan coast. Some officers said the town of 20,000 had been deserted and abandoned by the rebels.

WASHINGTON—President Carter warned that "it would be a mistake to be too optimistic" about Middle East peace prospects as he greeted King Hussein of Jordan at a White House welcoming ceremony Monday.

"If we fail this year, it is going to be very difficult to marshal an effort next year," Carter told Hussein at the start of their first session in the Oval Office.

Hussein, the third Middle East leader to come here, said Jordan is ready "to play its full part in the quest for a just and lasting settlement."

Seizing Carter's own theme of morality in foreign affairs, Hussein complimented the President for recognizing "a code of behavior" between nations. "In the long run," the king said, "that which is moral is most practical and lasting."

TOPEKA—Gov. Robert Bennett vetoed Monday a bill designed to finance a computer filing program for Uniform Commercial Code filings which the governor said went beyond that limited scope.

He also announced vetoing Saturday bills to change the authority for imposing local sales taxes and to permit payroll deductions from state employees' paychecks.

These vetoes and those earlier announced by the governor's office will be considered by the legislature when it returns to Topeka Tuesday for a three-day wrap-up of the 1977 session.

KANSAS CITY—The Kansas City school district took further legal action against striking union teachers Monday, bringing 126 more contempt motions, as the strike continued through its 36th day.

That increases to 154 the number of strikers under prosecution on contempt of court charges for picketing in violation of a temporary restraining order issued by the Jackson County Circuit Court.

Teachers unions and strikes are forbidden under state law.

The county's special strike prosecutor, Joseph Stevens Jr., said he has not yet determined what fine he would recommend against the striking union, the Kansas City Federation of Teachers.

Bennett signs bill to create state department for elderly

TOPEKA (AP)—The skirmish over how the state should administer its programs for the elderly ended Monday when Gov. Robert Bennett signed into law legislation which creates a cabinet-level state Department of Aging.

The governor also signed a bill which expands the state's open meetings law to more clearly define public access of governmental decision making.

The new cabinet-level agency was not Bennett's first choice for administration of programs for the elderly, but the governor said Monday he was optimistic that the new department could meet the needs of Kansas's older citizens without becoming a bureaucratic burden.

Bennett supported establishment of a division of aging within the state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, but legislators and organized groups representing elderly citizens wanted a whole new department.

THE GOVERNOR added that he withdrew his opposition to the new department because of the need for the services it would provide.

Energy crisis neglect appalls Sen. Everett

The failure of the Kansas legislature and Congress to act on the energy crisis is a national tragedy, said State Sen. Donn Everett (R-Manhattan).

Everett spoke to the Manhattan Lions Club last night at the Wareham Hotel about the problems of this legislative session.

"I'm appalled at the criticism Carter's program is receiving," Everett said.

The water table in northwestern and southwestern Kansas is diminishing fast and in some areas the water has already run out, he said.

"But you all probably know more about it than I do," he said.

State universities, private colleges and junior colleges are all competing for state money. The result is the legislature is like "an octopus trying to feed too many tentacles on too little seaweed," he said.

Everett pointed out the irony in the defeat of paramutuel wagering.

Paramutuel wagering is illegal, he said, yet bingo and grocery store games have become big time gambling operations.

Later Everett commented on the bill to decriminalize marijuana.

The decriminalization bill was defeated because of internal problems, he said.

The bill got bogged down on whether marijuana smoking was right or wrong, he said. The issue was to adjust the fine to fit the crime.

Everett said the bill had a good chance of passing next session.

Nation's energy use must be reduced

Energy was in the news Monday, as United Nations energy experts estimated the world's supply of gas and oil would last for another hundred years.

The prediction follows President Jimmy Carter's April 20 energy address to the nation. In his address, Carter warned the nation the world would run out of energy by 1990 and that Americans would have to reduce their energy consumption.

THE AMERICAN people now must decide which announcement to believe.

Carter's figures, supplied by the CIA, paint a very bleak picture of the world's oil and gas future and Carter acted accordingly when he formulated his energy plan.

Although the U.N. figures are less bleak, Americans should not be impressed by the rosy U.N. estimates.

IT MAKES more sense for America to prepare for a world with dwindling supplies of oil and gas than to ignore the possibility and suddenly face it.

The avowed purpose of Carter's plan is to have the American people make sacrifices now rather than suddenly face a huge energy shortage in the future.

AMERICANS are energy-foolish and extremely wasteful. Reducing the consumption of energy, particularly oil and gas, is only reasonable considering the limits of the resources and their rapiz depletion.

America should discount the optimistic U.N. estimate and tighten its energy belt before there is suddenly no belt left to tighten.

Manhattan's Macho Meat Show

If you spent all of last Saturday night in Aggieville, you missed the Manhattan Macho Meat Show or as the event is known in delightfully middle-class circles, "The Miss Manhattan-K-State Scholarship Pageant."

Feminists often criticize such events; they cry "exploitation and degradation" and they may be partly right.

But I modestly suggest that such criticism is also misdirected. What these pageants try to do is not so bad; they simply do it badly.

WE ALL know that the Miss America pageant and its multitudinous local-level reenactments are based primarily on the principle that "sex sells."

And so, in a sense, there is nothing wrong with the annual parades of pre-packaged smiles: there is nothing wrong with sex and there is nothing wrong with an event whose purpose is to titillate its audience. After all, some of the world's greatest art is fundamentally erotic in nature.

The pageants, however, do such a bad job of marketing their strongest point. They have been so sanitized and virginized that even the people who run them have been able to convince themselves the pageants are something they are not.

THEY are not scholarship contests. They are not, as the promoters claim, "contests to discover the beauty of the whole person."

No one in his right mind attends such contests hoping to find the "beauty of the whole person." We go there looking for something else.

And it is that "something else" that the pageants should push and drop the hypocritical attempts to make the events palatable for dowagers in Des Moines, Iowa.

I have a few suggestions. We must first drop the talent competition.

No one really cares if Suzy Ann Southerly can play "Flight of the Bumblebee" at triple tempo or read Shakespeare badly. (The application form for the Miss America Pageant includes a very small blank marked "Talent-If Any." The promoters obviously couldn't care less about talent either.)

IN LIEU of the question-and-answer period we could simply record a voice sweetly repeating, "I want to make the world a better and happier place."

Come to think of it, that wouldn't be much of a change.

We can drop that cutesie part of the national telecasts where each contestant parades around dressed as her state. How sexy is a woman with an oil derrick on her head and a flag sticking out of her navel? A definite turn-off.

If we eliminate these superfluous events there will be much more time to do what beauty contests do best—show off feminine figures in the most sensuous ways possible.

EACH contestant could present an exotic dance act. Such acts are quite popular in larger cities and the shows at the now-defunct Brown Bottle demonstrated that there is even a market for them in stodgy, old Manhattan.

The new pageants could culminate with a snake competition wherein each contestant writhes on the stage with an anaconda. Bizzare perhaps, but kind of kinky and a lot of good fun.

If sex lies at the heart of beauty pageants (and who can seriously claim it doesn't), then let's see more sex.

After all, it's a real bummer to pay $3 to watch admittedly beautiful women paraded around in evening gowns that hide too much in the first place.

Energy plan deserves 'applause'

Editor,

Perhaps this week's round of one-handed applause should go to President Jimmy Carter for his energy plan, in which he assumes that everyone owning a large car must be taxed more heavily.

I wonder if he thought about the folks too poor to buy anything but a used car with a gas-eating engine. I wonder if he thought of what will happen to the price of small cars.

Formal Rose Garden holds many memories

Editor,

The Formal Rose Garden of K-State is to be removed from the site between Justin and Dickens Halls. The Rose Garden has been there for at least 50 years. (If anyone knows the exact date please contact me). For many the garden is a beautiful place filled with warm memories of the past.

My parents Mr. and Mrs. F.E. Johnson were the first couple to be married in the garden 47 years ago. Many couples were married there afterwards.

It is important to save the treasures of the past for students and the alumni to enjoy. Save the Formal Rose Garden on its original site. Voice your opinion now.

THOSE people who have large, old cars won't be able to drive them because of the prohibitive price of gas and Carter's prohibitive tax on owners of large cars. These people won't be able to buy small cars because the price of small cars is already prohibitive.

Thus Carter thought this energy plan through? What are these people to do? Perhaps, they can stay at home and ration their water.

Hallelujah Brother Carter! A round of one-handed applause is in order of you, quieter than the Presidential limousine.

Print service necessary learning tool

Editor,

Re: Our letter in the April 14 Collegian concerning the Union print service.

First of all a brief history of past print services should be relayed. A year ago at this time there were two print machines operating in Seaton Hall. One was owned by Design Council and operated by student volunteers.

The other was owned and operated by a private cooperative of landscape architecture students.

SINCE then, the Design Council machine has suffered mechanical difficulties and we've been notified that the landscape architecture service is technically illegal.

As a result, the Union was approached by College of Architecture and Design Dean Bernd Foerster—after getting the approval and support of last year's Design Council—to provide these services for architecture and design students.

The agreement was made on the condition that the Union would receive no competition from the College of Architecture and Design, which meant the landscape architecture machine would have to be shut down.

OUR previous letter implied that the students of the college were displeased with the efficiency and quality of services offered by the Union.

This implication is not true, as the Union has actually been quite dependable and efficient. However, they must operate under constraints that the previous services did not have, namely the cost of labor and limited hours of operation.

The amenities enjoyed by architecture and design students have been replaced by more restricted and expensive services.

WE FEEL the need for a printing service inside the College of Architecture and Design as a learning tool and need access to a printing machine during off-hours to complement the services offered by the Union.

It seems rather ironic that an architecture college of more than 900 students and faculty cannot own or operate a machine which is an integral part of even the smallest professional architectural business and furthermore must rely on an external resource which is not as convenient as we feel is needed by students in our college.

Collegian's Mansfield story distorted senator's speech

Editor,

I am appalled by the Collegian reporter Jane Higgins' gross distortion of Sen. Mike Mansfield's speech on the subject of United States-China relations.

The brief summary of the speech which appeared in the Collegian on April 13 includes the statements that "Mansfield said the U.S. should recognize there are two Chinas—Communist China and Taiwan" and that "Mansfield said he hopes for full and normal relations between Taiwan and the United States." These statements were neither expressed nor implied in Mansfield's speech.

THE TAIWAN question is the fundamental obstacle to the normalization of relations between the United States and China. However, as stated in the Shanghai Communiqué: "The United States acknowledges that all Chinese on either side of the Taiwan Strait maintain there is but one China and that Taiwan is part of China. The United States government does not challenge that position. It reaffirms its interest in a peaceful settlement of the Taiwan question by the Chinese themselves. With this prospect in mind it affirms the ultimate objective of the withdrawal of all U.S. forces and military installations from Taiwan."

THE ABOVE passage has been quoted by Mansfield.

Clearly it also represents his own position. The complete text of his speech was published in the April 13 issue of the Manhattan Mercury.

Higgins' disregard of Chinese territorial integrity is extremely damaging to the growing friendship between the peoples of the United States and China.

Such irresponsible reporting is a disservice to the University community. I hope you will at least print this letter to help clarify the situation.

'Because' sufficient explanation for love

Editor,

Re: "Love is more than a four letter word," by Velina Houston in Friday's Collegian.

I agree, love is more than a four letter word.

I disagree that it is offensive.

Admittedly, the word is a bit overworked by some and a lot of things have been lost or given away for the sake of it, but this is a lot more desirable than not.

WE DO use the word a lot and yes, I do love my dog and strawberries. I also love my family, God and friends. I don't see a need to "define" why I love these.

This always tends to gum up the works. As you put it, love your companion because of his hair—what happens when his hair falls out or he just goes to the barber?

QUALIFYING our love is always one-sided. We may love the things they do or the way they look, but we should not love the people we love because of the things they can do for us. Just because is just right.

I don't know why certain people love me, if they do and I don't tell people why I love them.

They know that I do by the way I treat them and I think they can tell the difference from the love I show them and that which I show my dog . . . and strawberries.

Students to advise students

By KAREN RILEY
Collegian Reporter

Some students at K-State are now on both sides of the academic advising table. "Peer advisers," or students advising students, are working in several departments this semester.

"Peer advising is good if the students take their responsibility seriously and are not just schedule makers," said John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs. "But there is a difference between academic advising and schedule making."

Chalmers said advising should get young people "in gear" intellectually, and the purpose of it is to enroll students in classes which will make them read reflectively, think analytically and express themselves well.

NAISB sponsors bus trip to gallery

K-State's Native American Indian Student Body (NAISB) is sponsoring a free bus trip Monday, May 2, to the Nelson Art Gallery in Kansas City, Mo. to view the "Sacred Circles" art display.

"Sacred Circles" is a collection of more than 850 Indian art objects from more than 2,000 years of Indian civilization in America.

The Kansas City appearance will be the only opportunity Americans will have to view the exhibit. It was first shown in London where an estimated 200,000 persons attended.

Reservations for the trip may be made from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today and Wednesday in the Union on a first come, first serve basis. Sixty reserved and standby seats will be available.

Students will need their ID and paid fee cards. Buses will depart at noon in front of the K-State Union.

"Our students as a whole respond to graduate student assistants because they are more of the same age and can relate to them more," he said.

"Peer advising would add another dimension to our advising, and if the students take a genuine personal interest in the students, peer advising would be great," he said.

CHALMERS SAID any advising is effective as long as the student will accept it. Currently, he said, many students look at advisers as schedule makers and do not discuss long term, career interests with them.

However, the type of advising a student receives from peer advisers may be questionable.

"If the peer advising gets into whether one teacher is better than another, that is student opinion," Chalmers said. "Student opinion is not reliable and is fickle."

"But, on the other hand, student judgment is hardly ever wrong. Student judgment is an accumulation of information through the years," he said.

Starting this week, the College of Business Administration will have peer advisers in Calvin Hall reading room for those wanting help with pre-enrollment.

"Last year, we started gathering ideas on a direction we would take with a peer advising program," said Betty Clement, coordinator for the program. "We have figured out guidelines for the program and have chosen 10 advisers and three alternates."

"This semester the peer advisers will work just during pre-enrollment but next year, they will hopefully be available all semester," she said.

"We will probably be answering a lot of policy questions," said Chuck Winter, one of the peer advisers, in business. "We can also answer questions about instructors, like how they teach and handle a class. But we are objective with it. We can't say if a teacher is good or not."

ALL THE business peer advisers go through training about the policies and requirements of the department and must take courses in helping and communication skills.

"The peer advisers will be allowed to sign a student's enrollment permit," Clement said. "But we still want the students to go through their faculty adviser."

"The peer advisers are not to be a replacement to the faculty adviser but an additional source for the students."

Carter administration fires ASCS director

State Director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service Frank Mosier has been fired by the Carter administration.

Mosier said he was given a two-hour notice Friday to vacate his office in Manhattan and turn it over to an administrative assistant, Manuel Penn, who was named temporary director.

Jack Foust, acting regional director of the ASCS in Washington, said Mosier was one of several state directors deposed, the normal result of a political change of administration.

Mosier, 47, has been Kansas ASCS director since 1970 when a state ASCS committee manned by Republicans hired him. A new committee, with Democratic appointees, will name the next director.

Affairs committee works on recommendation to offer A credit for credit-no credit classes

By JACKIE OLSON
Collegian Reporter

K-State students may be able to receive A credit for A work next year in classes where only credit-no credit options currently exist.

A recommendation that students taking a class credit-no credit be allowed to receive an A where one is earned is being drawn up by Student Senate's Academic Affairs Committee.

The proposal's biggest advantage would be that students who do excellent work will be given appropriate credit, said Pat Sargent, business senator and committee member.

"Now, people are afraid to go with this because they don't know what it is or they have misinterpretations," Sargent said.

Some claim the current system is misused to lessen academic work to avoid grading systems and to bolster student grade point averages (GPAs), Sargent said.

PAT McFADDEN, senior in pre-law and an author of the proposal, said while some of these criticisms may be true, problems of misuse could be handled by reviewing and revising the guidelines of the current credit-no credit policy.

"The number of As earned in a course will not change, only the number officially recorded," Sargent said. "A credit would serve as a probable incentive to students."

If a student knows he can receive an A for A work his motivation would not be lost, and he would keep working the entire semester for the A rather than do just the required work for a passing D, he said.

Sargent said the current credit-no credit would not change. Students still could take only one-sixth of their non-major requirements credit-no credit.

If senate approves the resolution, it goes to Faculty Senate for approval. Faculty Senate action isn't expected until next fall.

Reevaluation to question vote of CIC as budget advisers

By PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

A reevaluation of the role of the Citizens Involvement Committee (CIC) will be discussed at tonight's Manhattan City Commission work session.

The CIC, established two years ago to receive suggestions for the yearly budgeting of the Community Development (CD) grant, has asked the commission to redirect its future purpose and function. CIC members believe the commission has failed to listen to their suggestions in the past and question the necessity of a CIC in the future, according to one member.

"Our concern on this is that the commission didn't use our ideas when considering this year's Community Development budget," Owen Duer, CIC vice-chairman, said. "I have been involved with the CIC during two budget preparation periods, and they (the commissioners) have yet to listen to our suggestions."

CIC MEMBERS are appointed by the commission to serve as advisers for distribution of the annual CD budget. This year the committee submitted three proposals for budgeting the $992,000 federal grant, none of which were approved in full by the commission.

Originally, the CIC suggested allocating more than $150,000 for the construction of a planned elderly center. In its approved budget, the commission instead diverted $10,000 from the contingencies fund to study a proposed elderly center.

"Last year the commission didn't do hardly anything we suggested, and this year nearly the same thing happened," Duer said. "Maybe there shouldn't even be a Citizens Involvement Committee."

Reevaluation of the CIC's role is only the first of a number of reviews that need to be made by the commission this year, according to Mayor Russell Reitz.

"We need to set time this year to review several other advisory boards, and the CIC will serve as a starting point for this," Reitz said. "Our upgrading of the planning board is an example of the type of changes we hope to make."

In other business, the commission will discuss the possibility of sponsoring an alcohol safety action project for Riley and surrounding counties. The project will be conducted by the North Central Kansas Guidance Center and will work to correct problems of drunk driving and alcoholism in the area.

The project will be funded by a federal grant, but needs the commission to sponsor the grant and serve as a fiscal agent.

ERA debaters sound off in awareness program

By KATHY LALLY
Collegian Reporter

Passage of the Equals Rights Amendment (ERA) by the Kansas legislature hasn't quieted vocal opponents of the amendment, which needs approval from three more states to become the 27th amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

The pros and cons of ERA, which would provide "equality under the law" for women, were discussed in a panel debate last night in the Union as part of a four-day women's awareness program sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

"This is one of the most dangerous, mischievous pieces of legislation I've ever encountered," said Barbara Mahaffey, Manhattan resident.

If ERA is passed, the states will be surrendering important rights concerning marriage, divorce and child custody to the federal government, Mahaffey said.

It is "sheer madness" to pass a constitutional amendment where there is "no difference between males and females," said Harold Voth, of the Menninger Foundation.

If a woman is given a job over a man who is supporting a family, the man is destroyed, Voth said. "If you destroy him you destroy his family."

"I favor ERA because it will give both men and women the right to choose their role and not have society impose one set of values upon them," said Jim Hamilton, K-State pre-med student.

Minnesota pitchers injured; Pazik in serious condition

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP)—The Minnesota Twins have lost pitcher Mike Pazik for at least the rest of the baseball season and relief hurler Don Carrithers for about two to three months after they were seriously injured in a two-car collision Monday.

Pazik, 27, a right-handed starter who had a 1-0 record, suffered fractures of both legs.

The 27-year-old Carrithers, who had worked five innings and allowed five runs, had a compound fracture of his right knee and a fractured right wrist on his pitching arm. He had no won-lost record with the Twins, who purchased him from the Montreal

Sports

Expos near the end of spring training.

PAZIK WAS a passenger in a Volkswagen van driven by Carrithers when the vehicle and a Ford, driven by Cheryl Petros, 23, North Canton, Ohio, collided on a freeway ramp.

The Minnesota Highway Patrol said Petros, alone in the car, was entering Interstate 494 on an exit lane as the van was coming off the freeway shortly after 1 a.m. Petros, who suffered minor injuries, was treated and released at Fairview Southdale Hospital in Edina.

Pazik was listed in serious condition in the intensive care unit. Carrithers was in fair to serious condition.

Twins team physician Dr. Harvey O'Phelan said Pazik would be out of action for a "long time" because of the accident which endangers his career.

The physician said Carrithers would not be able to play two to three months.

ASKED ABOUT the effect of the accident on the Twins' pitching staff, Manager Gene Mauch replied, "To hell with that stuff. I just feel sorry for those boys."

Mauch said he didn't hear of the accident until he went out for breakfast about 6:30 a.m. Monday, because he has no telephone in his apartment.

The Twins flew home Sunday night after their 12-6 victory over the Rangers at Arlington, Tex., arriving about 9:15 p.m. A spokesman said Pazik and Carrithers apparently went to their apartments, unpacked, went out for dinner and to pick up groceries.

Colbert, Snead head golf tournament list

Four more professional golfers have been added to the field for K-State's annual Celebrity Golf Tournament May 2.

Joining former K-State golf standout Jim Colbert and J.C. Snead, nephew of former pro great Sam Snead, will be Forrest Felzer, Homero Blancas, Don Iverson and Andy Bean.

Blancas, the 1965 Rookie of the Year on the pro tour, has four major titles to his credit. He won the Seattle-Everett in 1966, the Colonial National Invitational in 1970, the Phoenix Open in 1972 and the Monsanto Open in 1973.

FELZER, winner of the 1974 Southern Open, posted second-place finishes in the Houston Open and the Danny Thomas-Memphis Classic last year.

Iverson, who was the 1966 NAIA champion before turning pro in 1971, captured the B.C. Open in 1975. Bean, only in his second year as a touring pro, was a collegiate standout at Florida.

Other sports celebrities who will be on hand for the affair are former K-State football stars Steve Grogan, Don Calhoun, Lynn Dickey and Mike Kuhn; Tony Adams, Gary Barbaro, Mike Livingston, Jim Nicholson, Ed Podalak and Jan Stenerud from the Kansas City Chiefs; Ellis Rainsberger, K-State football coach; Jack Hartman, K-State men's basketball coach; and Tex Winter, former K-State basketball coach and now head man at Northwestern.

K-STATE'S fourth annual fund-raising affair, an 18-hole handicap low-ball team play tournament open to both men and women, will be played over the par 70 Manhattan Country Club course. An hour-long clinic conducted by Colbert and the other touring pros will kick off the day's activities at 10 a.m.

A $125 entry fee will cover a Sunday night pre-tourney party and Monday's tournament, clinic, noon luncheon and awards banquet. Entries should be sent to Merle 'Bones' Nay, Athletic Department, K-State University, Manhattan, Kansas, 66506.

Galleries and clinic tickets, priced at $5, are available at the Manhattan Country Club, Stagg Hill Golf Course, Fort Riley Golf Course, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, First National Bank, Citizens State Bank, Kansas State Bank, Union National Bank and the K-State Athletic Ticket Office and football offices.

Batsmen lose twice

K-State's men's baseball team lost a doubleheader Monday to Emporia State in Emporia.

In the first game, K-State pitcher Scott Mach threw a two-hitter and only 45 pitches, but lost 1-0.

The game was filled with controversial calls, including one where the umpire said Billy Preston, K-State second baseman, pulled his foot off the bag on an attempted double play.

"It was the worst job of officiating I've seen in 16 years," said Bill Youngblood, K-State third baseman. "We tried to get a double play and he (the umpire) said Preston pulled his foot off the bag. The calls were unreal."

Robert Hoenig got K-State's only hit of the game, a double. Hoenig got picked off moments later.

K-State assistant coach Steve Anson was kicked out of the game for arguing with the umpires. Anson protested a call at second base between innings and was ejected.

In the second game, Emporia State beat the Cats, 9-4.

Both teams scored two runs in the first inning. The Cats added a single tally in the third.

Mark Ramsdale started pitching for K-State, but was relieved by Mark Nelthorpe. Nelthorpe, who has been bothered by a shoulder injury, entered the game with runners on first and second and one out.

He struck out the first batter he faced, but then gave up back-to-back homers and a single.

Bobick, Norton prepare for title bout with Ali

NEW YORK (AP) — "I want to have a fight in June, then they say Ali and me in September," said Ken Norton.

"I would like a title fight with Ali next, but possibly I could fight Jimmy Young," said Duane Bobick.

The two heavyweights were on the telephone from their California training camps, talking about what they would like to do after they beat each other May 11 in Madison Square Garden here.

The winner will be an important factor but would not necessarily have the inside track to a championship fight against Muhammad Ali, who will defend the title May 16 against little-known Alfredo Evangelista of Spain, dubbed "the Bull" by Ali and "the Spanish Omelette" by one columnist.

Ali has said he would like the winner of the Bobick-Norton fight to fight Jimmy Young and that winner fight him. Madison Square Garden claims Ali already has signed to fight Bobick and has gone to court over it.

Any boxing promoter worth the name would prefer a Bobick-Ali fight. Norton already has fought Ali three times, losing twice. And more important, Bobick is white.

Design II students revive buildings' walls with murals

By DENISE HAYDEN
Collegian Reporter

The walls of several Manhattan buildings are taking on a new look—and a new coat of paint.

The walls are being revived with murals created by Design II students enrolled in Mural Painting.

Diane Dollar, instructor for the course, said the murals are a learning project for the students, incorporating the "best of everybody" into the scenes. Some students work on the background, others the figures—each works on their particular interest.

Dollar said either people call and suggest a wall be painted or she may see a wall which "needs help" and contacts people to arrange for its use as a project.

STUDENTS ARE working now on murals at Woodrow Wilson Grade School which include an interpretation of the Wizard of Oz, a graphic aquarium scene and a fantasy of foods which have come to life in the lunchroom.

As the murals progress, the children's interest increase.

Mary Spicer, freshman in graphic design, said one child asked, "How come you can draw on the wall and we can't?"

A landscape mural showing the evolution of four seasons is being painted at Wharton Manor Nursing Home, Dollar said.

THE FREEMONT Coin-A-Matic, "probably the only laundromat with its own mural" will soon display a mountain scene, Dollar said. Two projects are also in progress in Seaton and Thompson Halls.

This is the third semester for the Mural Painting projects and each semester more walls are suggested for projects, Dollar said.

Each semester, mural painting students look at murals done in previous semesters. After "getting their courage up to begin the projects," Dollar said the class proceeds to the new projects.

Each student is required to formulate a concept and create a design for each wall. One design is selected by the wall "donator" and the painting begins. About three to five students work on each wall, with the person who designed the wall in charge.

Wall murals for the students range in size from four by eight feet to the 42-foot by 10-foot high project at Wharton Manor.

When the painters were at one grade school, Dollar said a little boy became quite interested in the mural and painted a small portion of the mural himself. Dollar said the residents at Wharton Manor especially enjoy the murals and the company of the painters.

Minority of women in city jobs unintentional

By KEN MILLER
City Editor

The domain of Manhattan's city government is occupied largely by men, but according to City Personnel Director Bill Zelazny, it's more by coincidence than design.

Zelazny said the city's personnel department recruits women as heavily as men but the women who are qualified for the positions usually end up working for private businesses and not for municipal governments.

No women currently are employed by the city in any department supervisory capacities, Zelazny said. He said a woman recently resigned her post as head of the survey crew—the highest position occupied by a woman since Lois Fink retired from the city commission in 1970.

"We have two individuals who are first line office supervisors," Zelazny said. "There are also some women administrative supervisors in accounting and data processing."

HE SAID IT would be fair to say no women are holding decision-making jobs or jobs in "the higher level of government."

The city does, however, employ women in several maintenance fields such as the zoo, parks and street departments.

Asked what he saw as the reasons for so few women in local government, Zelazny said the lack of applications from women and stiff competition from private business were the main causes.

"Definitely a problem is the lack of applications," he said. "The city has an affirmative action policy and advertises heavily for high-level technical positions throughout the midwest region. We get few responses from women."

Another problem cited by Zelazny is typical of hiring difficulties met by other governments, he said.

"A lot of governments are finding problems with specialized fields such as engineers. Private industries normally outbid governments because we're bound by minimum and maximum pay scales," he said.

ZELAZNY CITED draftsmen as a typical area which the city can't compete with private firms.

Riley County has a woman in an administrative role in Wanda Coder, county clerk. Manhattan, however, had a female once as clerk but office supervisor is now the highest ranking woman in the city's government.

Zelazny said women in supervision is a situation which changes from year to year—the city may have several women in higher positions one year and very few the next, as is now the case.

"It changes," he said. "This year, right now we don't have a woman in a manager-type position, but you have to look at the situation in the long run."

Students enroll at any age

By JOCELYN SHEETS
Collegian Reporter

College campuses can no longer be considered the stomping grounds for just young people and teachers. Increasing numbers of adult students are enrolling to return to school after several years.

Uteva Powers graduated from high school in 1939. She will receive a degree from K-State in May. Powers, 56, senior in journalism and mass communications, has been going to college since 1966 taking a few hours each semester.

Powers and many other students at K-State are members of a new student community appearing on college campuses across the country. This community is made up of students 25 years and older who are returning to school, often after many years, to complete or increase their education.

In 1975, 3.7 million adults registered for college courses, comprising 34 per cent of total college enrollments. This reflects a jump from 22 per cent in 1970. The U.S. Census Bureau estimates that by 1980 adults may form 40 per cent of the college population.

THERE HAS been speculation that colleges are encouraging this enrollment of the non-traditional student to make up for the deficit enrollment in recent years.

"We (K-State) aren't experiencing a deficit in traditional student enrollment who move directly from secondary school into a full-time four-year college program," said John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs. "We are, however, having a significant and exciting rise in our non-traditional enrollment."

Chalmers said the University doesn't ask the ages of students so he doesn't know the percentage of the older student population. He said there are a large number of older people at K-State who have returned to school wanting better employment prospects.

David Brooks, sophomore in computer science and business, returned to college after working in various occupations, over a six-year period. He said he picked up a semester or two of college here and there during the six years.

CHALMERS SAID he thinks the biggest reason behind the increase in enrollment is the intellectual curiosity many people have.

"Many people just want to increase their learning and knowledge," he said.

Powers said she wanted to write children's books so she decided to go to college. She said she took three hours the first semester and did housework to pay her way through school.

"It (going to college) was something I had regretted not doing when I was younger and had always wished to go," Powers said. "When my oldest daughter was a junior in college, I decided to take a few hours to see if I could hack it."

Murderers become actors in documentary on Manson

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Manson," will be shown in Forum Hall today at 3:30 and 7 p.m. Admission price is $1.

By KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

Some of the most bizarre murders on record were committed by a family—Charles Manson's family.

The documentary, "Manson," delves into the lives of these murderers through their own words, testimony of former family members and by statements of their cell mates.

The film contains no actors, only footage compiled by Joan Huntington.

THE CALM, cool and complacent look on the family members' faces while they explain Manson's philosophies is frightening.

"You kill whoever gets in your way," one family member said. "You have to make love with that," another said, indicating a gun.

Another tells a cellmate that she received a sexual release by stabbing those "plastic-faced mannequins." The mannequins referred to are the victims of the Sharon Tate murders.

Still another said she was ready to die because Manson had already died for her.

Manson, the mastermind behind the family, has spent more than half his life in prison serving sentences for burglary, grand theft, forgery, pimping, and is currently serving life imprisonment for murder.

K-State is trying to meet the need for education in a non-traditional way, Chalmers said. K-State offers more evening classes to meet the needs of the community's working people who want to take a few college hours, he said. The University offers Saturday morning classes, which are more for teachers who want to take graduate work, he said.

Powers said she has found that courses at K-State are geared for a specific direction in a student's field, not for a specific age group.

VINCENT BUGLIOSI, the prosecuting attorney, adds brief narrations to the film to fill in background on the family.

The continuity of the film is good and it is edited well and flows along without seeming staged.

Seeing the murderers is chilling. They appear to be common, ordinary people. The fact they would kill for Manson—a short, slight, ex-con—is frightening.

The film shows a lot about the people Manson controls and Manson himself. It's interesting to learn about them because they and the mastermind who controls them will be up for parole in 1978.

Watergate does good, Dean says

TOPEKA (AP)—If there is any recognizable good to be derived from the Watergate episode, it is that it likely will prevent similar abuses of political power for a long time, John Dean said here Monday.

Dean, who was White House counsel to former President Richard Nixon and went to jail for his part in the alleged coverup, was here to address a student convocation at Washburn University. He also held a news conference.

"I think it'll be a long, long while before you ever see anything like that again," Dean said of the abuses in the Nixon administration which are lumped under the word "Watergate" since the breakin at the Watergate triggered the unraveling of the entire episode.

Dean told the students he still isn't positive why the so-called White House plumbers unit broke into Democratic Party headquarters at the Watergate, but he presumes it was a "fishing" expedition for political financial information which could be damaging to the Democrats.

"They were in there fishing. Fishing for some kind of financial information," Dean said.

the streets, they watch the passersby and the hustle and bustle in the city.

Child's company needs sale permit

RAMONA, Calif. (AP)—The 12-year-old president of a company with gross earnings of up to $3,600 monthly has been ordered to appear before the state Board of Equalization to explain why the firm has no permit to sell its product—manure.

Richard Cessna Jr., president of Kidco, Inc., and his three young co-officers, ages 9 to 14, also have been accused by the state of failing to charge sales tax.

The youngsters—Richard's sister, Ne-Ne, 9, vice president; another sister, Bette, 11, secretary, and a half-sister, June Cole, 14, treasurer—went into business a year ago with a contract to sweep the six main streets of San Diego Country Estates for $150 monthly.

They branched out by contracting with their father, who supervises the development's 110-horse stables, to remove manure and wood shavings.

AFTER COMPOSTING the mixture, they sell it to landscapers and the local golf course at prices lower than commercial suppliers.

The young entrepreneurs also offer a service to kill gophers for $1 each, but that's another story.

The contract, which the youngsters wrote, says it can't be canceled "unless the kids screw up."

Cessna's father, Richard, said he will accompany them Tuesday to the hearing in San Diego, about 45 miles away.

"The Board of Equalization says they need a permit because it is something tangible and that they have to add a sales tax for their customers," the elder Cessna said. "They may have to pay the state sales tax on their past sales, plus penalties."

Athletes reply to rape story

Representatives of the Athletic Residence Hall last night released a statement to the Collegian in response to Monday's edition of the Collegian which reported on an alleged rape and other incidents.

It is the first official statement the athletes have made concerning the incident since it occurred March 30.

Representatives of the hall's residents—basketball players Darryl Winston and Mike Evans and football team representatives Joe Hatcher and Gary Spani—released the statement which reads:

"In view of recent newspaper articles, we, the athletes of the Athletic Dorm wish to release a formal statement:

—The residents of the Athletic Dorm are as concerned as the student body for what happens in our dorm and on the campus.

—We have and will continue to cooperate fully with the University concerning the alleged incident.

—99 per cent of the athletes have been unjustly labeled in the Athletic Dorm by the Collegian.

We know that the press has been irresponsible in covering the alleged accusations and due to sensational reporting, bad light has been shed unfairly and unjustly on all residents of the Athletic Dorm.

Many hard hours have been spent in developing positive input into Kansas State University by the student athletes. We resent indignantly the recent implications and untruths and the negative image given to us as a group.

We do not approve or condone the conduct reported in the alleged incident, nor do the residents approve or condone the manner in which the press has handled this affair.

As all KSU students know, the foundation of American journalism is objectivity and fairness to all, not sensationalism and generalization. We appreciate the cooperation of the Collegian in presenting both sides of the story.

Conserve resources, Apodaca says

By DENISE NICKLE
Collegian Reporter

The energy shortage, unemployment and educational opportunities are among the problems facing every American, regardless of ethnic background or cultural differences, said New Mexico Gov. Jerry Apodaca.

Apodaca, the first Chicano governor in his state since 1914, spoke to a small audience Tuesday in McCain Auditorium as the final all-University convocation speaker of the year.

"We have grown accustomed to electric shavers, air conditioners and gas guzzling cars," he said.

APODACA SAID these luxuries have become symbols of the American dream but aren't the essence of American life.

Work patterns and life styles must be altered to conserve natural resources, he said.

"The United States has entered an era of limited resources and left an era of abundance," he said.

"It's about time we devised a plan of economic stability that does not rely on waste," Apodaca said in praise of President Carter's energy program.

New Mexico has tried to create an economic climate suitable to intelligent growth, he said, which protects the environment yet doesn't discourage industrial growth.

Apodaca said private communities must react to the problem, and only when they fail to do so should state and federal regulations be imposed.

"The less government the better," he said. "People are not interested in giving up their hard-earned money to a government that spends it recklessly."

"People want to get government out of their pocket and off their backs," he said.

APODACA SAID education and employment are essential to political involvement, and political involvement is necessary for minorities to succeed.

"It's hard to talk politics to someone with limited education or someone struggling to feed four or five mouths," he said.

He said overcoming stereotypes is a major part of his responsibility as a minority governor.

President Carter's recent appointment of three people from New Mexico to cabinet level positions indicates his commitment to making his administration responsible to various ethnic groups, Apodaca said.

MEChA incident resolved; allocation still endangered

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Allegations that K-State's Chicano student organization MEChA lied to Student Senate to get more senate funds were resolved Tuesday at an informal meeting between senators and Hispanic students.

But despite the settlement still another threat to the group's $3,175 tentative allocation has appeared.

Senate may reduce MEChA's $2,000 tentative allocation for honorariums Thursday because the body allocated more money than is available, said Cindy Thomas, senate chairman.

"There is a possibility senate might reverse the allocation," Thomas said. "There has been some concern on the funding of honorariums because of the representation thing, but mainly some senators feel we should not be funding honorariums and that we just don't have the money."

"I have heard two things from senators about this," she said. "One is to cut down on the honorariums and the other is to cut all honorariums. I doubt they will cut all of the honorariums."

THE ORIGINAL controversy arose when Hector Medina, a Puerto Rican student, accused MEChA of misrepresenting itself during allocation hearings by claiming the group represented all Hispanics.

"A lot of senators felt they were funding a group which represented all Hispanic students when really they are funding a group that mainly represented Chicanos," Thomas said.

Hispanic students are Spanish-surnamed students, including Chicanos (Mexican Americans), Puerto Ricans and Latin Americans.

"I think senate funded MEChA on the understanding that it represented all Hispanic students—senate is an ignorant group when it comes to other cultures," said Dave Kaup, arts and sciences senator.

Thomas said she thought the mistake was innocent.

Sauter to tell rape decision

Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter will announce this morning whether he will press charges against the men allegedly involved in the March 30 incident in the K-State Athletic Residence Hall in which a woman reported she had been gang-raped by five football players.

Sauter said last night he would announce his decision about 9 a.m. this morning. He said he had received an update of the K-State Security and Traffic investigation and was reviewing it last night.

JERRY APODACA, . . . governor of New Mexico, gestures to the audience during his convocation speech Tuesday morning in McCain Auditorium.

Union struggles to pay bill

BY DOUG HALL
Collegian Reporter

Not even the approved $5 fee increase can help the K-State Union pay its utilities bills this semester.

Union Director Walt Smith said he is "holding my breath from day to day," hoping the Union can "get out of paying the bill," which he estimates is $25,000.

THE $25,000 amount represents a utilities rate increase from the K-State Physical Plant, which supplies most of the Union's utilities, for the first six months of 1977.

The Union's utilities contract says the University will provide utilities at cost, Physical Plant Director Case Bonebrake said. In the past four years the utilities rate has not risen along with the cost of providing utilities.

"We stood a loss for as long as we could, then we raised our prices," Bonebrake said.

"We calculate our costs as closely as we can, but we don't adjust our prices every month," he said. "We have been just absorbing the increase."

If Physical Plant were to continue offering discounted utility rates to the Union it would violate state policy which requires student unions to pay its own utilities.

"It isn't that I demand that the increase be paid, it's that state law requires it," Bonebrake said. "This isn't a Physical Plant policy. It's illegal for us not to charge it."

"It's not in our budget," Smith said. "We're holding off on our bill from Physical Plant until I get some word from the administration."

IF THE Union is forced to pay, the money will be drawn from working capital, Smith said.

"It'll mean that we've got $25,000 less working capital at the end of the year," he said.

The rate increase also affects the athletic department, housing and the endowment association.

The Union's budget for next year will provide for the higher utility rates, "unless we get another increase," Smith said. The budget allocates $143,000 for utilities, compared to $80,000 for this year.

Board says budget function 'symbolic,' wants redirection

BY PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

The Citizens Involvement Committee (CIC), which provides citizen input on important community issues, vented its complaints about the city commission's failure to follow CIC recommendations concerning this year's Community Development budget at last night's commission work session.

The CIC, consisting of 13 members representing various community areas, was established two years ago to field suggestions for the yearly budgeting of the Community Development grant. This year the CIC presented three plans for budgeting the $992,000 federal grant, none of which were approved in full by the commission.

"As long as I have been on this committee there has been a reoccurring question of what this committee's purpose is and what our goals should be," said Diane Gates, CIC chairman. Gates asked the commission to redefine CIC's goals and determine whether or not there should be a committee.

ACCORDING TO City Attorney Ed Horne, the legal definition of CIC's duties are two-fold. The committee is to receive broad citizen input on community issues through public hearings, and must then meet regularly and present its findings to the commission.

Many CIC members believe the commissioners totally disregard their recommendations once they're presented. In a letter read by Gates, CIC member Ben Nyberg said if the committee's only use is ceremonial, he wished to resign.

The commissioners expressed their sympathy with CIC members, but commissioner Bob Linder said "there are no quick remedies to the problem."

"I have approved of your (CIC) actions in the past," Linder said. "Just because I disagree with some of your findings doesn't mean they weren't helpful."

Commissioner Terry Glasscock said he believes CIC serves as a useful advisory board, and outlined four areas he would like the committee to look into. He said there are problems with downtown redevelopment, parking problems around the University, city recreation facilities and the feasibility of public transportation, which could benefit from public comment before the commission takes any action.

"I think you're a valuable group," Glasscock said. "I'd hate to see a mass resignation or individual resignations by committee members."

COMMISSIONER Robert Smith said he wasn't surprised by CIC's problem.

"This isn't a unique situation," Smith said. "I really wish we had a better understanding with all our appointed boards."

Mayor Reitz said all city advisory boards will be evaluated this year, and postponed any action on CIC until its turn for evaluation comes up.

WASHINGTON—The House voted 236-179 Tuesday for a symbolic rejection of the $12,900 annual pay raise that members of Congress began receiving in February.

The vote struck from a target budget resolution the funds equivalent to the $7-million cost of the raise.

Rep. Otis Pike (D-N.Y.), who offered an amendment to delete the money, left no doubt that he intended the vote as a test of sentiment on continuing the raise. The resolution is to set spending goals for the year beginning Oct. 1.

LOS ANGELES—Goodby, waxy yellow buildup. Goodby Fernwood flasher, Tom, Loretta and Charlie. And goodby, goodby "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman."

Television's most outrageous soap opera will be canceled this summer after two years because its creators said they wanted to go out while it was still a hit.

"Throughout television's history hit shows have been allowed to run to the point where they fizzle out," said creator-producer Norman Lear of Tandem Productions at a news conference Tuesday. "We didn't want that to be 'Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman's' fate."

Star Louise Lasser denied she had quit the show, although she admitted that the schedule of five shows a week was strenuous.

BELFAST—People are leaving Northern Ireland by the thousands in a growing exodus from the strife-torn province. It is one of the biggest population shifts in Western Europe since World War II.

British officials estimate 16,000 pulled out last year, nearly double the number who left in 1974 and 1,000 more than in 1975. They believe that as many again will follow this year, frightened away or disillusioned by the failure of British governments and feuding politicians to end the bloodshed that has taken 1,750 lives since 1969.

The conflict, deeply rooted in Irish history, pits the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army against Protestant extremists and the British army.

RICHMOND, Va.—Lady Bird Johnson, who stumped through Texas for her late husband when he was a senator and did a whistle-stop tour when he was president, is back on the campaign trail—this time for her son-in-law.

"I don't presume to tell Virginians about Virginia politics. But I do know a lot about Chuck Robb," she says.

Meeting the voters in Hopewell, Danville, Culpeper and other towns, the widow of President Lyndon Johnson says of Charles Robb:

"I have confidence in him. I believe in him. He has natural leadership qualities."

In 1967 Robb, then a young Marine officer, married Lynda Bird Johnson in a White House ceremony. Now he is battling two members of the Virginia House of Delegates, Ira Lechner and Richard Reynolds III, for the Democratic lieutenant governor's nomination.

BERLIN—Rudolf Hess, Hitler's onetime deputy and the lone inmate of Spandau prison, observed his 83rd birthday Tuesday, but for once he didn't ask for a cake.

The former deputy Fuehrer of Nazi Germany is said to love sweets, and over the years the Americans who take their turn guarding the Allied prison in April have given him a birthday cake.

But an official prison source said Hess didn't ask for one this year. "If Hess or someone else had asked for such a specialty for him on his birthday, it would have been provided," he said.

Opinions

Articles appearing in this space do not necessarily represent the views of the Student Publications staff or the Board of Student Publications.

Leader's zeal bears watching

Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider's decision to ask the Kansas Grain Sorghum Association to vacate Waters Hall is sound.

The organization should not be subject to criminal charges nor required to pay the University back rent for use of the facilities, Schneider said, but they should leave. The same should be true for any other private organization which takes unfair advantage of this university.

K-STATE'S INVOLVEMENT with private farm organizations should not be discontinued but use of state facilities by such organizations must be carefully monitored. Groups such as the sorghum association, corn association, nut growers and irrigators often choose K-State professors to serve as leaders.

Most of the ag organizations were founded to promote education and research in their field so choosing a professor to lead their group is only logical.

UNFORTUNATELY, IN their zeal to advance the purposes of such organizations professors and extension specialists face the possibility of using state facilities or funds to advance the political wishes of their group. The free use of space in Waters Hall is only one of the minor improprieties of this type.

The line between a research group and a lobbying group is thin. It is possible for an officer of a private farm organization to not let its policy affect him but as one University official pointed out, "it is difficult."

LAND-GRANT universities have had a long and mutually beneficial association with these organizations. Any group tied as closely to the University as these ag groups bears close watching. Not because of any great desire by their leaders to misuse state funds but simply because those who run the groups are motivated to do what is best for their organization and they're only human.

Flegm and the cosmic note

Flegm looked at me earnestly and said, "Let's not talk about it, OK?"

Flegm was my new houseguest. He'd be staying for a week but I didn't mind because he was a close relative of mine. He was half brother, half Canadian bacon.

"It" was the cosmic note modulator, Flegm's invention that had made him wealthy overnight. The "cosmic note" is the high-pitched ringing you hear when surrounded by a totally silent and still environment. Supposedly, that very soft background frequency is the sound of the Earth doing its thing. Flegm's device could modulate that universal note to harmonize with the proper alpha waves in the brain. The result was possible worldwide happiness. The machine is now being studied by the Army as a potential weapons system.

SINCE FLEGM had been in seclusion for the previous ten years, I was quite surprised to see him sitting under the mailbox reading my mail when I got home. He had come out just to see "what the heck was going on."

"So what's happened?" Flegm asked.

"Not much. Gone through eleven cars, three cats, three years of high school. Four years of college and wasted a hell of a lot of time."

"Wasted? Nothing is a waste of time."

"Killed it."

"OK."

Now it was my turn to take the offensive.

"What are you working on now? The theory that the human race is a bunch of dwarfs? An indestructible coffee table?"

"NO. I'M cultivating mutant fingernails and constructing transparent, non-toxic molecules that are the size of grapefruit. Great party gags as well as a significant scientific breakthrough!"

I didn't laugh although I should've.

After a lengthy session of discussing the political ramifications of the kazoo, we decided we were hungry. I took him to Hardee's. As we walked in, Flegm grabbed my arm as he went pale. He had just spotted the little scarves and hats that the female and male employees had to wear.

"Scott, I'm afraid we've walked into a den of mouse-women and infamous point-headed burger boys. I've heard they're deceptively lethal!"

FLEGM WAS serious. His isolation had affected him more than I had imagined. I calmly explained to him that if we give them little trinkets and talked to them nicely, they would appreciate it in their own simple way and thank us by offering food. Then they would go back to playing with their "joy-boxes"—the things with the buttons and numbers that emit odd noises.

While we were eating, Flegm asked about my plans for the future.

"It looks like I may work for the Federal Communications Commission chasing down kids with unlicensed walkie-talkies and listening for audible no-no's on the public airwaves."

"Why?"

"Because I'm looking for a good ol' one-way suburban ticket to oblivion. HA, HA, HA HA."

I HAVE a tendency to laugh at inappropriate times.

After we had finished our "meal," I gave Flegm a tour of Aggieville. Since there is little fascination in laundromats and we are both teetotalers, the tour took approximately four minutes. We dashed back home and began playing a game of two-handed Risk.

"Hey!" I exclaimed (that's what the exclamation point means). "Tonight we switch over to daylight savings time. It is now 3:15 instead of 2:15."

"Huh?"

"We lose an hour today in the interest of farming."

"BLAAGGGTH! I can't AFFORD an hour. Don't we get a choice?"

"Nope. But don't worry. We get it back in a few months."

"With interest?"

"Sorry."

"It's enough to make you want to switch to lunar time."

CLIMAXING A rousing evening of mutual disenchantment and boredom, we collapsed during a discussion on how to found our new First Materialist Church of Sears.

In the subsequent days Flegm and I played nose flute and jews harp duets, did unidentified dirty laundry, listened to scores of records and got sick of each other.

I'VE JUST BEEN AWARDED A $25,000 GRANT TO STUDY THE INTELLIGENCE LEVELS OF HOGS... IF YOU'RE SMART YOU'LL LISTEN CLOSELY TO WHAT I'M ABOUT TO SAY TO YOU...

"Flegm," I squeaked at the bus station as we were about to part, "since I'm going to write some of these conversations down for others to read, say something funny for posterity."

"To get to the other side."

We both laughed. We were punch line junkies.

As Flegm's bus rumbled away, it seemed to resemble a giant loaf of Wonder bread going to a clandestine rendezvous with a huge salami (probably disguised as a tank truck). Object: sandwiches.

Hoping Flegm could still hear me, I yelled, "GREEN SIDE UP!" and laughed.

Letter to the editor

Nary a word

Editor,

Something is wrong when a large body of the most respected students (the athletes) acquire the worst possible image because of what a few people are involved in.

SOMETHING is also wrong when a large body of students acquire so little of any type of image, good or bad, when the majority of that body is involved.

I am referring to the recent Engineering Open House, international student activities and other large activities that have involved many people and yet received nary a word from the Collegian staff.

Perhaps someone in Kedzie Hall has their head screwed on backwards, or are you not still a college newspaper in its true sense?

Article unfair, athletes not animals

Editor,

The article on rape in Monday's Collegian was blown way out of proportion. I couldn't believe what was said about the athletes and I don't know how anyone could print such stuff in the Collegian, especially as one-sided as that article.

BASED on the article, women should beware of the wild animals that have taken over the Athletic Residence Hall because they may be hazardous to our genitals! People are crazy!

Doesn't anybody think that the athletes are actually live human beings that do have feelings and can respect a woman? And I'm afraid whatever respect others had for the athletes has been well destroyed and that article did its share.

It's really too bad that people can't see the athletes as normal people instead of some kind of super stud or some kind of golden god. And I also feel bad for the women who think of an athlete as some piece of status.

AS FOR the ladies' comments of being attacked, they're full of bull! And no less. First place if a girl had any brains she wouldn't be over at the A-Dorm in the middle of the night and no doubt drunk.

It's hard telling what she was wearing or how she was acting. I do know one thing though; when a woman advertises her goods (candy) for free, but won't give it away when the offer comes up she is asking for it.

Either advertise and give or don't advertise.

Second, why didn't the woman who was supposedly attacked at the A-Dorm report it and press charges? I'm sure if you know your attackers it would be easy to press charges. What kept you from pressing charges? Or were you actually forced?

AS FOR the woman who was attacked four different times she had it coming to her.

When it happened the first time she should have reported it, but no, she goes back three times after that. What for? Apparently she enjoyed it or she wouldn't have gone back at all.

As for the mattress on the floor, woman, you sound like making out is part of this guy's daily exercise routine and the mattress on the floor just makes it a little easier.

As for the girl who was attacked by the track athlete and the girl who was supposedly attacked by her TV watcher; I have one thing to say, something turned them on and it wasn't your perfume. By the way, was that track athlete a javelin thrower?

I'M NOT saying that a rape didn't take place or hasn't before, but I do know that we don't have a bunch of rapists as athletes.

I know only a few athletes and they are very beautiful people who believe in respecting a woman. If a woman wants to be respected she will be and if she doesn't she won't!

I'm afraid these ladies sound like they're full of bull or they would have done something about their attackers and wouldn't have waited for this article to come about before revealing their attempted rapes.

BUT I do believe women are fair game at the A-Dorm when: They advertise their goods, stay at the dorm all hours of the night, don't watch their actions and dress and are drunk and as loose as a goose.

What man is going to respect that? I'm not saying all athletes wear haloes, but I sure can't respect the views of you women when you never did anything about it in the first place.

I sure can sympathize with the athletes at the time because of all of the dehumanizing humiliation they are all going through because of a few others and because of your (late), but outrageous stories of attempted rape or attacks.

NOTHING like making them dirt under you feet!

One last thing, ladies, get your facts together before revealing it to the public. I'm sure everyone would like it a lot better especially the athletes.

Residence hall allegations unjust and unverified

Editor,

I find it incredible that the Collegian would dedicate three pages to a story dealing with rape on campus without first verifying the allegations and "facts" used in the article.

MONDAY'S article made repeated assertions and allegations that forced sexual activities occur within the K-State residence halls on a frequent basis.

Not only are these statements particularly unjust and potentially libelous, but are totally without cause.

For although the above allegations and assertions were repeated throughout the article, the Collegian, in keeping with its tradition of thorough investigative reporting, failed to contact either the director of housing, various hall directors, assistant directors, complex directors, hall staff or any hall resident for a verification or denial of these alleged activities.

FURTHERMORE, the Collegian failed to cite a single incident or reliable source to support these assertions.

Rather, the article merely reported generalized statements by K-State Athletic Residence Hall residents that forced sexual activities occur not just in the A-Dorm, but in all K-State residence halls.

The K-State residence halls operate under the philosophy that residents are responsible for their own actions and for respecting the rights of their peers.

IF FORCED sexual activity, as referred to in Monday's Collegian, were to ever be reported in a residence hall, you may be assured that it would be dealt with promptly and swiftly by hall staff, governing board and judicial board.

Minority needs unfulfilled by flicks

Editor,

Seeing that this looks like the time of year K-State has focused a spotlight on the movies being shown on campus, I would like to make a special comment concerning the area of minority-related movies shown around here.

IT SEEMS that if you are a minority person on campus that does not want to spend every weekend from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m. at a party, or down in Aggieville at one of the beer infested taverns and would rather take in a nice, relaxing movie, you are going to be out of luck.

Unless you enjoy great classics like "Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice," or "Logan's Run" or "Gable and Lombard" and of course we can't forget such greats as "The Return of the Pink Panther."

I'M not trying to knock Walt Disney's "Alice in Wonderland," but these movies do not cater to the minority needs on this campus.

It is bad enough that Union Program Council programs movies that insult the majority number of students on campus, like the unforgettable "Immoral Tales." But when they have the nerve to show a racist cartoon such as the Bugs Bunny flick that was shown in the Free Films Series in the Union Little Theatre, it's pitiful.

I TIP my hat to Ben Wearing and his column "Racist cartoons inexcusable," that was printed in the Collegian.

I feel it is time UPC takes an in-depth look at situations involving the types of movies being shown in the Union on the weekend especially.

UPC should ask itself if it is meeting the needs of all the students on campus.

IF THEY can answer yes to this question and show only two minority-related movies out of the 35 movies shown this semester on the weekends, then maybe the minority students on this campus should ask UPC if they enjoy racism.

Allegations unfounded

Editor,

In reference to the Monday Feature RAPE: all we have heard is "alleged, alleged, alleged." I think it is time we stopped giving this University a black eye without any tangible evidence. I am not suggesting that the incidents did not take place, but until the woman or women involved come forward why not drop the issue?

I applaud Mike Evans for being the only person quoted in your article who would reveal his name. Why was no one else quoted by name? It seems we have a lot of rumors and accusations floating around with no concrete evidence to tie them to.

As for the men who live in the Athletic Dorm and are concerned about their reputations, I suggest that they stop waiting for some paternalistic action from the University. They're not going to get any, nor should they. If you men want the rumors stopped, then organize yourselves, get to the bottom of all the stories and put a stop to them by policing yourselves. If not, then don't complain about "unfair" rumors that all athletes are rapists, because fair or not they will persist.

Players' production free expression

Editor,

As a cast member of the K-State production "Lysistrata", I am compelled to say a few words to those nice people who have been ripping down our publicity posters.

We have rehearsed this play for more than six weeks. Students and faculty have put thousands of hours of preparation into the elaborate costuming, make-up, choreography, lighting, set and of course refinement of acting.

THE INTENTIONS behind all this are to gain creative experience and entertain people—not to be lewd and shock anyone. This play is one of the more expressive productions the K-State Players have presented, but what is college about? Isn't K-State a place to express yourself freely?

EVERY person's rights end where the next person's begins. Whose rights have been violated by those publicity posters? Is it not we (the cast and crew) whose rights have been violated by that senseless destruction of property? (Why not just burn down McCain Auditorium?) It's just freedom of speech folks.

If the sexual candidness of "Lysistrata" has shocked anybody (i.e. poster rippers) let them step forward now or forever hold their peace.

A-Dorm residents should police actions

Editor,

Re: Monday's article concerning rape.

From our viewpoint it appears that those residents of the K-State Athletic Residence Hall who feel that they are being unjustly persecuted should divert their energies from complaining about the results to eliminating the cause.

WOULD not your present image be respectable if the alleged acts of forced sex had not occurred?

Therefore, it is our opinion that the elimination of these acts, caused by a supposed few, would probably rectify your image.

A workable solution would be peer pressure.

Instead of complaining about your personal images, why not be publicly counted as being entirely against such actions? This alone should help improve your image as well as making those residents who are committing these immoral acts think twice about the possibility of getting caught.

SURELY, if one resident is courageous enough to voice his disgust, others will join in.

Many residents referred to the A-Dorm as a "zoo," remember that in a zoo the animals are confined and the public is free to come and go unharmed.

Property tax laws cause confusion for students here

By JULIE DOLL
Collegian Reporter

Will Rogers once said two things are certain in life: death and taxes.

For K-State students in Riley County, however, it's the certainty of taxes which is causing some confusion, according to County Treasurer Marilyn Lowman.

All residents of Riley County are required to pay property taxes, Lowman said. A resident includes anyone who is employed in Riley County or any married student. Single students have the option of being a resident of either Riley or their home county.

THE MAJOR problem is students don't realize they must pay property tax for the entire year of 1977, even if they move in May or June, Lowman said. Kansas law requires that property tax be assessed on Jan. 1 for the entire year.

Lowman said the county sends out property tax statements in November for that year. At least one-half of the tax must be paid by Dec. 31, and the rest must be paid by June 1 the following year.

Gov. Boren urges no price controls

WASHINGTON (AP)—Oklahoma Gov. David Boren, who said President Carter betrayed campaign promises to deregulate natural gas prices, urged the President Tuesday to move toward deregulation.

The governor, one of Carter's early backers, said after a 30-minute meeting with Carter in the Oval Office that he approved of the conservation part of the President's energy proposal. But Boren said he offered to the President and his energy chief, James Schlesinger, his own ideas for a transition period that would lead to removing price controls on natural gas.

He would not give any details.

"Many students come in to pay the last half of their 1976 taxes before June and don't realize they must also pay property taxes for 1977 before leaving the state," Lowman said.

Not all Riley County residents have been assessed. Because of the large number of students in the county it's impossible for the county assessor to check which students should be assessed, she said.

"Trailer court owners send in a list of trailer owners, and we get a list of K-State faculty and staff members, so all of those people are assessed," she said.

Students who own cars also face confusion. Out-of-state students are supposed to pay taxes to the county where the car is located. This means a student from Missouri should pay property taxes on his car to Riley County as well as his home county. A Kansas resident is required to pay taxes on his car to the county where the owner resided on Jan. 1.

THE CITY of Manhattan has a tax levy of 102.77 mills which means a student with a car valued at $1,000 would pay $102.77 in property taxes. The K-State residence halls, Jardine Apartments, and the trailer courts to the east of campus are in Manhattan Township where the tax levy is 71.86 mills.

"There are so many students with cars that it's really impossible for the county assessor to check all of them, but those who have been assessed should pay the tax," Lowman said.

Failure to pay property taxes can result in a fine of up to 100 per cent of the original tax due. An unpaid tax liability also goes against their credit because such information goes to credit bureaus.

Students' summer classes include travels to Europe

Several K-State students will get credit for spending the summer in foreign countries. Many departments offer credit for participating in organized foreign studies.

Eight K-State students will travel through 10 European countries comparing their agriculture from May 29 to June 23.

THE STUDENTS will visit England, the Netherlands, France, Switzerland, Northern Italy, Austria, Germany, Denmark, Sweden and Norway.

"The course is called Comparative Agriculture and that is the major interest of our trip. But for many of us, it is the first time overseas. So the trip will involve more than just agriculture," said George Ward, K-State faculty adviser for the trip.

Students will receive four hours of credit for the month-long tour. After returning to the United States, they will write an analysis of their findings, Ward said.

The cost of the trip is $1,500 plus $64 for K-State enrollment fees. This cost includes all food and lodging for the students, Ward said.

The trip is co-sponsored by the University of Missouri.

Nineteen K-State students will study the language and culture of Mexico from June 9 to July 9. They will study at the University Ibero-Americano in Mexico City, said Margaret Beeson, associate professor of modern languages.

The students will visit the Museo de Antropologia, a world famous museum of anthropology; Mexican folk dances and an arts and crafts bazaar, Beeson said.

STUDENTS may receive from six to nine credit hours for the month of study. The cost of the trip is $350 which does not include transportation.

Two K-State students will be participating in the Kansas Summer Language Institute study in Germany from June 7 to August 8.

They will study the German language, literature, art, history and culture by attending lectures, theatre and opera performances, universities and art galleries, said Heinz Bulmahn, assistant professor of modern languages.

The students will live in private homes in Eutin, a resort town in northern Germany. They can earn up to six credit hours in intermediate or advanced German, Bulmahn said. A University of Kansas faculty member will accompany the students to Germany, but most of the instruction will be done by German instructors.

THE COST of the trip is approximately $1,400 which includes tuition, air fare, room and board in Germany and all scheduled trips and events while in the country. Students must pay for their passport, medical fees, books and personal expenses.

Twelve students will spend six weeks in France studying at the Sorbonne in Paris and traveling through the country for six credit hours from June 7 to August 9.

The students will take a formal language course for four weeks in July at the Cours de Civilisation Francaise at the Sorbonne, said Claire Dehon, professor of modern languages and faculty adviser for the trip.

The cost of the trip is $1,300 which includes all travel expenses, tuition for K-State and the Sorbonne and housing in Paris.

Kansas City teachers proclaim they would defy order again

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Five teachers who spent two weeks in jail for defying a no-strike order emerged from their cells Tuesday and proclaimed they would do it all again if they had to.

"I do not know whether it did our case any good, but it made me feel better to know that I went to jail for something we all believed in," said Lareza Slater, one of the five who surrendered to serve 15-day terms April 12 rather than return to work.

"I can only hope that we got our point across," said Earl Vaught, another of the jailed teachers. "We would not have done this for increasing our own salaries. Money for supplies and decent books, yes, I would have to do it again."

Forensics team does well at nationals

The national forensics tournament last weekend ended a successful first year of competition for K-State's individual event forensics team.

K-State was the only Kansas school at the tournament, which was at George Mason University in Virginia, and three team members had successful finishes.

Wendy Schiappa, sophomore in political science, won second place in informative speaking and Steve Walton, freshman in political science and Ed Schiappa, senior in speech, were semi-finalists in extemporaneous speaking.

Harold Nichols, associate professor of speech, said he was "very pleased" with the team and was "looking forward to doing better next year."

The 22-member team has attended eight major tournaments and have had first places 13 times, as well as finalists at each tournament.

Most of the team members had not competed at the college level before this year, but most had experience in high school speech competition, Nichols said.

The individual events are comparable to the high school program, although there are a few different events.

The program was started last year because interest had been shown in individual entries and the debate program could not finance competitors in the events.

Those interested in competing next year may contact Nichols at 532-6875.

Burgers are bad business, Buddy

It has come to my attention that there is a lack of controversy on campus. So, in keeping with my policy of full-stomached-philosophy, I question the need for any fast-food hamburger "restaurants."

The rush begins at 5 p.m. Pimple-faced high school kids yelling "May I help you?" at the top of their voices to a crowd of painter pant, rugby-shirted young Americans who have just cashed their allowance checks.

In the other extreme are the Stone Rangers. Those plastic hippies forever playing with their "long hair, eating paper burgers because they (the rangers) are too high to cook. They are the ones who bitch and scream about the shape of our country perched upon a red plastic bench, molded into the shape of the Hamburgler.

And finally, Mr. and Mrs. Joe America accompanied by their 2.3 children attempt an evening of gracious dining. This evening consists of milkshakes, french fries, hot apple pies and a burger soaked in ketchup. Then back home to absorb some television.

Think a moment. Where do all the wrappers come from that encircle that cardboard crap? And what about all of the petroleum that goes into the manufacturing of plastic containers that are not recycleable?

The same people who are studying forestry and conservation can be seen with the business majors standing in line to pay for junk food that will keep the stomach satisfied for about an hour.

I know that burgers are big business. Without the fast-food chains teenagers would not have jobs and morons could not be managers. But it has to end somewhere. If you didn't agree just take a trip out to any main street in any town and open your eyes. Remember, there is an energy shortage.

Now lets cook something that doesn't take a lot of time and will fill you up, not out, to coin a phrase.

In response to my asking for recipes that are either suitable for camp cooking or summer delights, the following should suffice.

This recipe is from the kitchen of Maureen Thomas:

24 HOURSALAD

1 small head lettuce
1/2 cup diced celery
1/2 cup minced onion
1/2 cup diced green pepper
1/2 cup frozen peas
2 cups mayonnaise
2 tablespoons sugar
10 slices crisp bacon
shredded cheddar cheese

In a rectangular glass baking dish, cover the bottom with lettuce and add the vegetables on top. Mix the sugar with the mayonnaise and cover the entire salad. Sprinkle the bacon and cheese on top and cover with foil. Refrigerate 24 hours.

The lettuce remains crisp if it is sealed by the dressing and will keep for four days. Remember—the additions or subtractions of any ingredient is up to the discretion of the chef.

Now for those of you planning a mountain expedition this summer here is a creation suitable for campsite cravings concocted by Kim Montgomery.

WILD-MOUNTAIN-CAMP-OUT-STYLE-BISCUITS

2 cups Bisquick Mix
1/2 cup cold water

Kim said to use Bisquick Buttermilk Baking Mix with enriched wheat flour, I have no preference. Add the water and mix until a dough is formed. Detach a glob, roll in flour and flatten until it is the size of a silver dollra. Repeat until you have 20 biscuits. Place in a hot frying pan and cook until golden brown on each side.

That's all there is and Kim swears by them. The main advantage being there is no oil used. They are also suitable for cooking in the kitchen, using a medium heat. Now that is what I call a simple recipe.

Norton hangs up her javelin to concentrate on softball

By KRISTI SHORT
Staff Writer

In a quest to master the art of athletics, Susie Norton, a former Wildcat basketball starter and nationally recognized javelin thrower, chose to try-out for softball this year—her third collegiate sport.

Norton, a 5-7 powerhouse, is using her last semester at K-State to meet a challenge.

"Softball's always been my first love," Norton said, "then came basketball and track. Going an extra semester gave me a chance to see how well I could compete in softball on the college level. It was a challenge."

COMPETING AS a fifth-year senior in physical education, Norton has the highest batting average and most homers for the year. One of Norton's home runs won a game against Nebraska in the bottom of the seventh with two outs. Her batting skills, combined with her accuracy and quick reflexes at third base have proved to be an asset to the Wildcats.

Although Norton is a natural athlete, she said softball is a game which experience is of utmost importance. She's accumulated 15 years of experience.

"I began playing softball in the third grade on an organized team in Manhattan. I remember being recruited in 1971 by a Clay Center team which had over six straight state titles. That was quite a thrill for a 17-year-old."

"After that I played on a women's team out of Topeka. The same team Coach Akers (Judy Akers, women's basketball coach) played on.

SINCE 1973, Norton began playing slow pitch summer ball and concentrating more on track during the summer months. This year she decided to hang-up the javelin, after failing to qualify for the Olympics, and play fast pitch again.

"Since I hadn't played fast pitch in such a long time, there were some transitions I had to make," Norton said. "I was having trouble hitting the ball and also caught myself watching things instead of covering third. Runners can't steal in slow pitch."

At the age of 23, Norton said she hates to admit it, but she may be slowing down.

"I started realizing I was slowing down last summer when I wasn't getting to balls I had been able to before. It seems to be taking longer to react. It's either that or I'm just being too hard on myself," she said.

FOURTEEN pro-softball teams were started last summer and several college players have joined them. Norton said she once thought about pro-ball but doesn't see a future in it.

"I once thought about playing but it's too unstable. I think eight teams folded. I doubt if you could ever make it a career. It's more of a summer job," Norton said.

"Good players get 200 dollars a week—take home pay—but I may want to compete someday again amateurly in the javelin and going pro would make me ineligible."

Although she has received the national recognition as a javelin thrower, Norton prefers team sports.

"I'll always like team sports over individual ones," she said. "The companionship and friends you find, I enjoy greatly."

The Cats' season record is now 5-15. The men's team will play in a tournament against Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Iowa State and Nebraska May 5-7 in Lincoln, Neb.

The women's team will play this weekend in the Missouri Valley Tournament in Columbia, Mo.

Royals beat Texas, 6-3

KANSAS CITY (AP)—John Mayberry lashed a two-run homer and Al Cowens tripled home a pair of runs in support of Doug Bird's gritty relief pitching as the Kansas City Royals whipped the Texas Rangers 6-3 Tuesday night.

Bird, 1-0, entered the game in the fourth inning after Ken Henderson slammed a base hit off starter Andy Hassler's knee to load the bases with none out.

One out later, Juan Beniquez brought home Texas' third run with a ground ball, then Bump Wills went down swinging.

With the Rangers clinging to a 3-2 lead, loser Gaylord Perry, 1-3, surrendered a leadoff single to Tom Poquette in the sixth and Mayberry homered to put the Royals on top.

They added two insurance runs in the eighth when Mayberry drew a leadoff walk and took second on an infield out. Porter was intentionally walked but Cowens spoiled the strategy with a triple to right center.

'It's bullfrogs, boy...'

Last Saturday, I was walking home from one of my normal angling expeditions—I didn't catch any fish—when I saw a shocking sight.

Flying up over the hill in front of me were small trees, mud, chunks of moss and water-logged beer cans.

What could cause this terrible disturbance?

I thought someone had either hooked a record largemouth bass or something had gone wrong with a group of campers.

WITH HIP waders on my feet, a Kansas City Royal cap on my head and can of beer in my pocket, I began the long climb up the hill to see what was happening.

I carefully dodged the trees and debris that were flying through the air and reached the top of the hill.

Peeking over, I saw a medium sized farm pond. The shoreline of the pond was riddled with potholes and uprooted moss. Trees were lying everywhere.

Standing at the edge of the pond was an 80-year-old man. He was savagely flailing away at the shoreline with a large baseball bat.

With my confidence fully restored and chin pointed toward the clouds, I marched down the hill toward the little old man.

I TOLD him that if he was trying to find fishing worms, he would be better off to go up the hill because a pond shoreline is too wet.

His beady little eyes stared at me coldly. He looked at me disgustedly and said, "Boy. I ain't after no worms. It's bullfrogs, boy, bullfrogs. So why don't you be a good kid and get lost."

I advised him that getting bullfrogs in this manner was rather hard on the average baseball bat.

"Yea, I've already worn out three bats this morning."

He said bullfrogs grow so large in the old country, that the baseball bat is the only way to get them. I was going to tell him Kansas has the largest bullfrogs in the world but he was the one holding the bat.

I did tell him that hunting bullfrogs with bats is illegal and offered him several methods legal in Kansas. After a morning of swinging a bat he was starting to tire and readily agreed.

ONE METHOD to legally catch bullfrogs is known as the hand method. Here you quietly walk around the shoreline until you spot an unsuspecting bullfrog.

After spotting your victim, tactics vary. The most common tactic is to dive head first at the frog. If you don't want to get wet and dirty, this method is not for you.

A second method involves the use of a dipnet. In this method, a person slaps the dipnet over the frog to capture him. This is not really sporting and most who use this method come from New York.

Most anglers use the hook and line method. It is sporting, fun and not hard to learn. Besides, anglers can find a use for their $50 fishing outfit when they can't catch fish.

The angler pulls out about four feet of line from the end of the rod. On the end of the line, he attaches either a small fly or a hook with a piece of bright material on it.

The angler then sneaks up on the bullfrog and dangles the hook in front of him. The hungry bullfrog is then supposed to grab the fly in his mouth and he's hooked.

After a bullfrog is hooked, there are several uses for him. Bullfrog legs are tasty to eat.

Bullfrogs are also, at best, smelly. A great practical joke is to put a live bullfrog in someone's bed. This is sure to bring great laughs and joy.

ANOTHER K-STATE UNION CONCERT PRESENTATION

1004 BP

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—If Boston Celtics' guard Jo Jo White is trying to psyche guard Henry Bibby of the Philadelphia 76ers, forget it, Jo Jo. You're Henry's idol.

Bibby has been guarding White in the best-of-seven, semifinal National Basketball Association playoff series. He has been doing a pretty good job—if you don't ask White.

White scoffs at the suggestion that Bibby is containing the Celtics' jump shot artists.

"I'm getting my shots. Bibby's defense is over-rated. If I'm not scoring, then I'm just missing," White has said after each of the first four games. The series is deadlocked 2-2 with game No. 5 here Wednesday night.

DOES WHITE'S putdown offend Bibby?

"Why should it?" Bibby asks. "The Celtics run a lot of picks and we do a lot of switching, which gives him open shots. He gets points, too, on the fast break, when I'm not guarding him. I think I'm doing a decent job on Jo Jo. But you really can't stop a good player."

Then Bibby went out of his way to praise White, the eight-year veteran from Kansas.

"He's a very good player," said the former UCLA star who came to the 76ers' training camp this fall as one of a dozen guards trying to make the squad.

"I like the way Jo Jo plays,"

Bibby continued. "He knows the game. I always admired him, along with Jerry West and Oscar Robertson. He's a smart player. He doesn't force things. He penetrates fast, hits the open shot. He knows what he can do and does it. I respect players like that."

BIBBY WENT a step further. "I wish I had the knowledge of the game like Jo Jo. He's a thinking player, a team player. I like to think that I pattern myself after his style," Bibby said.

Okay Jo Jo, what was that you were saying about Henry Bibby?

Bibby is counted upon by the 76ers to key the defense. He doesn't have to think points, not with Julius Erving, George McGinnis, Doug Collins and Lloyd Free gunning for the hoops. He has scored 20 or more points in some games. He's averaged a little over 10.

"If I had to score, I could score," says Bibby. "It's no problem. Who can't shoot the ball in the NBA? But they need defense here. Gene (coach Gene Shue) said that's what he wants from me. So, I try and give it to him. I get the ball to Doc and George and Doug. We get scoring out of those guys."

Family income needs, prices climb

WASHINGTON (AP)—An urban family of four requires $16,236 a year for a "moderate" standard of living and, for the first time, needs more than $10,000 to maintain an "austere" living standard, the Labor Department said Tuesday.

The same family living at a level allowing some luxuries needs $23,759 a year, the department said in its annual analysis of hypothetical family budgets.

The costs were calculated for fall 1976. Compared to a year earlier, the income requirements rose 4.7 per cent, or $241, for the austere budget to $10,041; 6 per cent, or $736, for the moderate budget, and 6.6 per cent, or $1,259, for the higher budget over the previous year.

BY COMPARISON, the size of such budgets a year earlier rose between 7 and 8.2 per cent, and the year before that such annual costs increased between 12.4 and 14.2 per cent. Last year's smaller increase reflected the slowing of inflation.

The Consumer Price Index, measuring the impact of inflation on consumers, increased at a rate of 4.8 per cent in 1976, 7.2 per cent in 1975 and 12.2 per cent in 1974.

During the first quarter of this year, consumer prices rose 10 per cent at an annual rate. The Carter administration is predicting a 6.7 rise for the year.

The Labor Department's annual survey attempts to calculate costs on three different levels of living for a hypothetical urban family consisting of a 38-year-old husband employed full time; his wife, who doesn't work outside the home; a 13-year-old son and an 8-year-old daughter.

The couple is assumed to have been married about 15 years and to be "settled in the community."

THE BUDGETS are not based on how families actually spent their money but reflect assumptions about the manner of living.

The impact of rising prices of components in family budgets vary between the three groups, reflecting different living styles.

For example, food prices, which rose 1.7 per cent for the low budget, account for a larger proportion of the total budget at that level. By comparison, food costs for the moderate and high budgets rose only eight-tenths of 1 per cent last year.

Rising housing costs had a bigger impact on the moderate and higher budgets in 1976, increasing 8.8 and 8.7 per cent, respectively. This includes both rental housing and home ownership. Homeowner costs alone rose by 10.3 per cent.

In the lower budget, total housing costs, which include only rental housing, increased by 5.8 per cent.

The increased cost of medical care was among the fastest rising items in all three budgets last year, climbing 9.5 per cent in the low and moderate budgets and 9.6 per cent in the higher budget.

TAXES, including the increase on the income on which Social Security taxes are charged, accounted for a 4.7 per cent increase in the lower budget, 7.7 per cent in the moderate budget and 8.3 per cent for the high budget.

Personal income taxes rose 6 per cent at the lower level, and 9 and 11 per cent, respectively, for the intermediate and high budget.

In line with last year's report, family budgets were lowest in some cities in the South, and costs were 8.6 to 19.6 per cent higher in metropolitan areas than in non-metropolitan areas.

For low budgets, annual costs ranged from $8,887 in Austin, Tex., to $11,104 in Boston and $16,492 in Anchorage, Alaska. The high-budget totals ranged from $20,628 in Austin to $29,667 in the metropolitan area of New York City and northeast New Jersey.

According to the Labor Department's analysis, the hypothetical low-budget families live in rental housing, use public transportation or drive used cars and do most of their own cooking and washing.

Woman's role in the Church prompted by Biblical myths

By KATHY LALLY
Collegian Reporter

Previously, a woman's passive role in the church has been influenced by Biblical myths she was inferior to man. Through a reevaluation of Scripture, however, women have begun to take active roles in many aspects of the church, according to members of a panel discussion in the Union last night.

Sex roles and Christianity was the topic of the discussion, part of a four-day women's awareness program sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

The myth that "women do not belong too close to God," began with quotations from the Bible stating women were "bad" and "unclean" said Don Fallon, of the United Ministries of Higher Education. Because of this, women were denied the right to serve in the upper ranks of church ministry.

"The women's ordination issue is knocking at the door," said Daniel Scheetz of St. Isadore's Catholic Church.

"The story goes that in Vatican III, the bishops will be bringing their wives. At Vatican IV, they'll be bringing their husbands," he said.

"I feel like God has given women talents and abilities like men," said Norm Cunningham, student body president of Manhattan Christian College. "I can't see Him saying 'no, you can't use them'."

"I can't speak for God, but it's highly unlikely that He'd want half of the population excluded from the ministry," Scheetz said.

IN THE BIBLE, women are shown as submissive and inferior to men, Fallon said.

When he first arrived as a minister of a Wamego church 10 years ago, Fallon said men and women sat on separate sides of the church.

TRADITIONAL images of God show Him to be masculine.

"Men inserted their points of view when translating the Bible," said Mavis Wiseman of the Presbyterian Church's task force on women.

One version of the Bible states both the male and female form the complete image of God, Cunningham said.

Tube-less times tensionless for New York kids, parents

NEW YORK (AP)—Jeff Tewlow wrestled with his brother for half an hour. Vickie Gifford flew a kite. And Susie Kaplan read one long book after another.

After a week of voluntary deprivation, these grade-schoolers and their parents discovered that life without TV is not really as bad as some of them had feared.

They assembled at Public School 166 on Manhattan's upper West Side to mark their triumph over the tube, achieved during an experiment to see how TV affected them.

While they celebrated an absence of TV, their gathering was recorded by cameras from local stations.

"It was like taking an intruder out of our home," Janet Mervish, mother of two, related at the boisterous gathering.

Set up by Marie Winn, author of "The Plug-in Drug," the experiment was variously lauded as remarkable, exciting and instructive.

A NUMBER of parents noted that tube-less times were times without TV-related tension—without combat over which program to watch and without meal schedules geared to the tube.

It also made some aware that they watched TV simply because it was there.

A random look at the diaries the children kept gives evidence of a life enriched by such enterprises as "helping mommy in the kitchen," doing homework and having a conversation.

Young Jonathan, spoke of his mixed reactions: "At some times I felt good, and at other times I felt bad. The good times were when I forgot all about TV, and the bad times were when I found out there were good things to watch."

Doctor shortage in Kansas most affects rural regions

By CLEON RICKLE
Contributing Writer

The doctor who doesn't make housecalls, like the mother-in-law, is the common butt of jokes. The punchline "Take two aspirin and call me in the morning," has become a cliché.

But, many Kansans aren't laughing anymore. Their state suffers from a shortage of doctors.

Kansas has 134 doctors for every 100,000 persons according to the Walker Report, a 1976 study for the University of Kansas (KU) Medical Center. The national average is 159 per every 100,000. The state, therefore, needs 562 doctors to reach the national average.

ACCORDING to the standards set by the Walker Report, which specify how many and what kind of doctors should be practicing in Kansas, the state needs 613 more primary care doctors. Primary the Kansas Medical Society. "The shortage of doctors is a national problem and Kansas has advantages such as a good road network, efforts by the medical community and a central location.

"An awful lot of people in Kansas go out of state to get medical care," he said. Slaughter pointed to Goodland as an example. The town is close to the Kansas-Colorado border and flies in teams of doctors from Colorado. In this case, statistics do not measure the quality of medical care Goodland is getting, he noted.

Kansans are generally healthier people, Slaughter pointed out. Because of the state's rural background Kansas has few of the problems, such as pollution, stress and extreme poverty, which plagues urban states.

EXPERTS agree something should be done about the doctor causing "a remarkable turn-around in Kansas," he said.

"Our opinion is if we give a little time and patience to allow these new things to work, they will," Slaughter said.

Slaughter expressed fears that students, especially the cream of the medical students who could study at medical schools such as Harvard and John Hopkins, might leave the state to study rather than enter the medical service.

"Every school needs that sort of academic excellence," he said. Slaughter questioned if the bill would work in a society based on free mobility. It would be better to offer grants and incentives in order to attract doctors to the rural areas instead of forcing them there, he said.

"He (the doctor) will contribute more and assimilate better into the community of his own free will," he said. "I don't think the answer lies in strictly mandated legislation."

'An awful lot of people in Kansas go out of state to get medical care.'

care physicians are family practitioners, pediatricians, obstetrician-gynecologists and general internal medicine doctors. They are often the first and only doctors patients visit.

This year, 200 doctors will graduate from the KU Medical Center. If the class follows patterns set by previous classes, less than half will stay in Kansas to practice while the need for doctors grows.

By 1980, in order to keep up with the increase in the state's population and to replace doctors who retire or die, Kansas will have to find 1,228 more doctors. Of that number, 865 should be primary care doctors.

The doctor shortage is not the only problem.

"The problem is serious, but the problem is also one of maldistribution in Kansas," said Mary Wiersma, head of the Kansas Farm Bureau's rural health care department.

Maldistribution means urban areas have more than a fair percentage of the doctors.

ONE REASON for maldistribution is urbanization. People, including doctors, have been moving to the cities at the expense of rural areas.

Specialization is another cause of maldistribution, according to the Walker Report.

As medicine has become more complex and technical, doctors with exotic but narrow fields are needed to keep up with new innovations. Unfortunately, the specialist's field is so narrow he must practice in areas with a large population in order to sufficiently support himself.

"Kansas is relatively better off than most states," said Jerry Slaughter, executive director of shortage. Actual solutions, however, have often been snagged by controversy.

One effort, enacted by the legislature, offered 12 grants to students enrolling in the medical school in 1972. By 1974, the program had foundered.

"The timing was wrong," Wiersma said. "Students needed the money July 1 when they enrolled, not later. The students were angry because they didn't hear about it and the state was angry because there was no response."

A more recent attempt, Senate Bill 447, generated a storm of controversy during this legislative session. It has passed the Senate and is now sitting in a House committee waiting action, probably next year.

The bill establishes a "Kansas medical service" and requires students and residents (post-graduate students) who enroll in or after 1978 to join the medical service. The state would provide free tuition. The student must practice 18 months in Kansas for each year spent in school.

Debate over the bill involves differing philosophies—a belief in gradual and careful solutions and the belief that Kansans cannot afford to wait.

"The problem is not easily reducible to an easy answer," Slaughter said. "It's not a very easy thing to solve."

BECAUSE of the complexity of the doctor shortage, there can be no one answer, he said. Slaughter pointed to other programs such as recruitment drives, increasing the number of family practitioners, and residency programs which put residents in western Kansas towns to study.

These new programs are

THE MEDICAL profession does have legitimate fears, said Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee and one of the major sponsors of SB 477.

"But that there are not 200 highly qualified persons in the state of Kansas each year willing to receive free medical education is almost an absurdity to me," he said.

Doctors willing to serve Kansans would still go to the medical school, he said.

Winter scoffed at critics who said once such a bill is passed for doctors similar bills could be imposed on other professions such as lawyers.

"We can give them (lawyers) $200 and a bus ticket to Kansas City or Denver to get them out of the state," he said, tongue-in-cheek. "We have too many lawyers in the state as it is."

Critics of the bill have asserted that SB 447 would flood the state with primary care doctors but dry up the supply of other doctors.

"There's no reason for the medical community to react in that way," Winter said. He noted the percentage of specialists was too high.

"I hoped they learned something," he said. "For years, doctors were brainwashed by the medical school to go into the specialties."

"Kansans are paying millions of dollars for medical education and they haven't gotten anything in return," he concluded.

Faculty Senate requests office space for business

A proposal requesting office space for Faculty Senate is working its way through a senate subcommittee.

Currently, senators conduct business from their offices and senate has no central location to store records and papers, said Frank Orazem, senate president-elect.

"An office would allow us to facilitate the senate business away from the regular teaching duties," said Orazem, professor of agriculture economics.

The office would allow faculty easy access to senate records and improve communication between faculty, administration and students, he said.

New Aggie club to feature steaks

A new private club will soon be opening in Aggieville where Gily's restaurant is located.

"The new club will be called Gily's Landing and will serve food and have disco dancing," said John Gilman, owner of Gily's restaurant. It will have a Mississippi steamboat decor.

Depending on construction progress, which is now underway, the club will be completed some time in June. The tentative opening date is July 1.

"Faculty senate makes many decisions that affect all faculty," said Robert Johnson, subcommittee member. "We need a central location where faculty as well as senate can go for information."

Study may bring changes for civil service employees

BY SUSAN SPENCER
Collegian Reporter

Many changes have been proposed for Kansas Civil Service employees as a result of a state-ordered study done last fall of the state's civil service program.

Two bills, responding to areas noted in the study will be submitted to the Kansas Senate within the next month, said Debbie High, member of the Personal Management Study Review Group (PMSRG), which did the study.

THE SENATE bills would remove the mandatory retirement age for civil service employees and give them more opportunities to take civil service examinations.

"Other areas of concern include lack of information about personnel matters, non-standard personnel practices, out-dated and inequitable classification and pay plan, no statewide system for incentives and motivation, lack of training opportunities and career ladders," she said.

"Included in recommendations made to the Kansas legislature, are statute changes, administrative rules and regulations and administrative directives," she said.

Some of the directives proposed by PMSRG include a letter to be sent to employees in their June 1 paycheck summing up what the study accomplished.

New employee handbooks will be written and will come out in the summer.

Another directive will be a revision of the employee evaluation forms, which will be more fair to the employee because of more supervisor and employee cooperation, she said.

"A training section, hopefully on the board of the Division of Personnel by July 1, would coordinate efforts in training employees for other positions," said Pat Green, assistant director of Affirmative Action in Manhattan.

BY AUGUST, a statewide orientation program would be devised, similar to one begun in Manhattan in January. This program acquaints and informs new personnel with K-State.

In October, a statewide pay study will be undertaken in which the current pay plan will be studied as a way of developing a career ladder for employees.

"A career ladder would tell the employee exactly what opportunities are available in his position," High said.

Basically, employees do not have a strong voice, and a standing legislative committee that would be formed would assume the responsibility for the Kansas Civil Service, she said.

"KAPE-(Kansas Association of Public Employees)-is a bargaining agent for employees of the Physical Plant and housing," said Linda Morris, chairperson of the sub-committee of the Commission on the Status of Women.

"They would do more if they had the support of people on campus," she said. "A lot of what we are talking about concerns morale," High said.

Carter administration wants study of consumer co-op bill

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration parted company with consumer groups Tuesday and opposed legislation designed to encourage development of consumer cooperatives.

The legislation would establish a new federal agency to make $250 million a year in low-interest loans to nonprofit consumer-owned co-ops. Supporters say the loan program would encourage the growth of food and service cooperatives.

CONSUMER GROUPS say the co-ops lower prices to consumers while industry groups say they provide unfair competition to businesses trying to make a profit.

Roger Altman, assistant

Treasury secretary-designate, told Congress Tuesday the Carter administration wants a two-year study before determining whether the program should be established.

Since taking office in January, the administration has joined with consumer groups in supporting a variety of legislative proposals, including the consumer protection agency and proposals to provide federal money for defraying the expenses of consumers who want to testify before federal agencies.

Rep. Fernand St. Germain (D-R.I.) chairing hearings on the co-op proposal, said he was "gravely disappointed" at Altman's statement.

Owner claims cows well fed

Starving cattle case leaves farmers baffled

By DICK WILLIS
Staff Writer

CONCORDIA—A farm 12 miles west of Concordia does not look like the average farm in the area. The grass on the property is short because it has been grubbed down to the bare ground by cattle.

The brush and trees of the farm are missing the lower leaves and branches. People in the area say the grass has been eaten short and brush has been stripped of cover by starving cattle.

The farm is owned by Lee Stanford, a Concordia lawyer. A farmer who lives near the Stanford farm claims cattle on the farm are starving to death.

HE SAID he has watched a "dead wagon" pick up between 60 and 65 cows that have died since last summer.

"The dead truck don't pick up calves or the cows that come apart," he said.

Like many other residents of the area, the farmer wished to remain anonymous because he feared having a lawsuit brought against him, especially since Stanford is a lawyer.

He said he has talked to his own lawyer and was assured he could win a case, but that it would probably cost about $5,000 in lawyer fees.

A letter was sent by 30 local farmers to Cloud County Atty. Larry Vernon complaining about the alleged starvation of cattle on the Stanford farm.

STATE LAW gives veterinarians and officials of humane societies the right to confiscate animals which have been neglected. The county attorney can also file charges against someone mistreating animals.

So far no official charges have been made. However, the farmer said a person from the county attorney's office has been to Stanford's farm and taken a picture of about 35 dead cows.

The farmer said Stanford had 35 dead cows drug into a silo after the sheriff received complaints.

A story which appeared in the local Concordia paper Tuesday quoted Stanford as saying the "cattle are being fed." He said an attendant was supposed to take care of the cattle.

THE FARMER said after the story came out the cattle were hid behind a barn on the farm.

Apparently, the whole county is interested in the Stanford case.

"Everybody acts real nice to Stanford in town," the farmer said. "He scares everybody to death because he is a lawyer, but they know what is going on."

"Stanford says he doesn't know anything about it since somebody else takes care of the cattle. Hell, he drives by the farm every day in his new Lincoln Continental."

The farmer said 15 minutes after the story appeared about the alleged starvation, the cattle were turned out into a wheat field to "fatten up."

"He has fed them dry Johnson grass," he said. "Anybody who knows anything about cattle must know you don't feed them dry Johnson grass."

THE FARMER said many cattle died last winter because they didn't have water to drink.

"They didn't chop the ice on the water tank," he said. "That really got them. The cattle were bawling terrible out on the middle of the ice on the pond."

"There was a dead cow in the pond for a week. Somebody stopped and seen it and the sheriff made Stanford take it out," he said.

"The coyote hunters had a field day—they didn't have to go on the land, all they had to do was fire a shot in the air and the coyotes would start running from everywhere. One group came out and got nine coyotes in one day."

The farmer said he was worried about the possibility of disease because of the dead cattle lying about. He said his dog constantly drags bones of the dead cattle to his home.

Holiwell arraigned in dorm rape case

By THE COLLEGIAN STAFF
A K-State student was arraigned on a rape charge in Riley County District Court Wednesday in connection with a March 30 incident in which a woman says she was gang-raped in the University's Athletic Residence Hall.

Jerome Holiwell, a 19 year-old running back on the K-State football team from Manhattan, was arrested Wednesday morning at the athletic dorm by Security and Traffic police. He was taken to the Riley County Jail where he was later released on $2,500 bond. A preliminary hearing was set for May 6.

"The investigation will continue and other charges could be forthcoming," said Riley County Atty. Dennis Sauter. He asked that others with knowledge of the incident come forward with details.

Sauter began his investigation about two weeks ago after the woman, a freshman, decided to go to authorities with her story. She had earlier said she wouldn't try to press charges against the men—as many as five raped her, she said—because it "would be my word against theirs."

SAUTER said K-State administrators, coaches and athletes cooperated fully with the investigation.

"Players have talked to us. No one other than possible suspects have refused to talk to us," Sauter said. "Nobody has been trying to cover up this matter."

K-State President Duane Acker said the University will continue to cooperate with Sauter's investigation.

"The issue is now in the appropriate channels of due process and the University will continue to cooperate with the county attorney."

Acker said he "wouldn't make a prediction" as to what action the University might take against Holiwell should he be convicted in court. Holiwell faces possible action against him by a University tribunal after his case is finished in court. The maximum penalty the tribunal could impose would be expulsion from school.

"We're obliged to protect the rights of any student and assume innocence until proven guilty," Acker said.

IN OTHER developments Wednesday, K-State's annual Chalk-a-lot contest on the sidewalk in front of the Union caused more controversy than it ever has before. A chalk drawing of a building labeled "A-dorm" with a note underneath saying, "Help offset the economic losses of the A-dorm. Join your local orgy group," appeared early in the morning and remained until mid-afternoon when it was doused away with a bucket of water.

Minutes later another student wrote something in its place, drawing an angry crowd of students which broke up only after a campus police officer asked everyone to leave.

Several University staff members and the K-State Center for Student Development have started a letter-writing campaign to give the woman who allegedly was raped "moral support." They are urging persons to write the woman in care of Caroline Peine, a counselor in the center.

Bikes go electric for future needs

CHICAGO (AP)—An inventor and manufacturer of electric bikes and trikes says 10 million of the vehicles may be on American streets in the years ahead as an alternative to gasoline-fueled transport.

Joe O'Neill, who rigged his first electric motor to a bike when he was 12, holds a patent on an electric power pack that can be installed on any bicycle.

Intelligence activities cost may be public information

WASHINGTON (AP)—The director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) said Wednesday that despite some risk, the over-all cost of United States intelligence activities could be made public. But a cost breakdown—even by agencies—would be helpful to the nation's enemies, he said.

"There is a risk in every disclosure, but all of us feel the responsibility to be as open with the country as possible, so the need warrants the risk being taken," Adm. Stansfield Turner told the Senate Intelligence Committee.

THE CIA chief led a list of witnesses as the panel opened hearings aimed at determining whether any part of the nation's top secret intelligence costs, traditionally hidden in the budget of the Pentagon and other agencies, should be divulged.

There is strong sentiment in Congress, and some in the intelligence community itself, that public confidence in the CIA and other agencies, rocked in recent years by revelations of improper activities, might be restored if costs were exposed.

Some critics also contend it is unconstitutional for United States citizens to be denied this information.

Choosing his words carefully and several times declining to answer detailed questions for security reasons, Turner made it evident that any cost disclosure is not regarded with enthusiasm among professionals in the spy trade.

PRESIDENT Carter, he said, had ordered him not to oppose publication of the over-all budget of the intelligence community.

WASHINGTON—President Carter's proposed Department of Energy cleared its first legislative hurdle Wednesday when a House subcommittee approved the bill after curbing the power to be given the new Cabinet-level secretary.

The approval by the legislation subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee was the first by any unit of Congress on the proposed legislation. It came on a voice vote.

However, the legislation reported out by the subcommittee does not give the head of the new department all of the powers Carter had suggested.

WESTMINSTER, Calif.—The bodies of 114 unidentified victims of history's worst aviation disaster, the collision of two jumbo jets last month in the Canary Islands, were buried Wednesday in numbered graves.

About 250 people gathered under partly cloudy skies for a brief interfaith memorial service along rows of white burial vaults, each topped with red flowers.

After the ceremony, the vaults containing remains of the crash victims were placed in individual grave sites in a special area of Westminster Memorial Park to be dominated by a central monument naming the victims of the March 27 crash at Santa Cruz de Tenerife.

There was no mass grave as reported earlier.

WASHINGTON—Backing President Carter, Senate Democrats defeated two Republican efforts Wednesday to immediately cut federal income taxes.

The Senate rejected, 58-39, a GOP proposal that would have cut rates on taxable incomes up to $20,000, with most relief going to taxpayers in middle-and lower-income brackets.

The Senate then defeated, 62-32, a second Republican proposal for a flat 10 per cent cut in all individual income tax rates.

In their arguments for tax cuts, Senate Republicans hit hard at the themes that Carter's stimulus package now contains little for what they called the overburdened middle-income taxpayer and that high taxation is dampening business confidence needed for job-creating investments.

OAKLAND—Girding for a long, dry summer, officials have tightened water rations already in effect for more than a million people. But some San Francisco Bay area businesses and residents complain they can't even live with the old allotments.

New water-use restrictions were voted Wednesday for 1.1 million residents east of San Francisco. The allotments are aimed at cutting water use by 35 per cent. Previously, water officials had thought a 25 per cent cut would do.

"To be honest with you, I'm scared," said Oakland water spokesman David Vossbrink. "I'm scared when I see the pictures of how low Pardee Reservoir is, and when I know the water requirements of the system."

The district said it expects Pardee, its main source of water in normal times, to go dry by the end of the year.

ASPEN—Singer Claudine Longet, convicted in the shooting death of her lover, is sharing a jail cell with a woman convicted of drunken driving, authorities say.

Both women are serving 30-day sentences.

"They did not know each other before, but they do now," said the spokeswoman. "Both seem to be in good spirits. There doesn't seem to be a conflict of any sort."

Longet began serving her sentence April 18 for criminally negligent homicide in the death of skier Vladimir "Spider" Sabich.

Minimum wage bill waits for Bennett's final decision

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill to establish Kansas' first minimum wage law headed for the desk of Gov. Robert Bennett Wednesday.

Bennett said through an aide that he was "very pleased" that the bill passed, but declined to declare whether he would sign it into law, as is his custom on most legislation he has not seen in final form.

A TOP state labor official also hailed passage of the measure as the culmination of "at least a 20-year fight," but said it could have been better.

As it went to the governor, the bill includes most provisions Bennett wanted—setting a minimum wage of $1.60 an hour, with overtime for time worked beyond 46 hours a week, but exempting agricultural and domestic workers as well as those under 18 and those over 60 years of age.

PRESENT federal minimum wage is $2.30 an hour, but that wasn't the important thing as far as organized labor was concerned.

Getting a law on the books after years of work, and requiring payment of overtime to workers not engaged in business enterprises in interstate commerce was the key for labor.

The bill, which went to Bennett when the House approved it 73-49, completing legislative action on it, could apply to as many as 160,000 Kansas workers not now covered by the federal minimum wage.

Inactive legislators neglect business

Since January, the Kansas legislature has debated, talked, considered, studied and generally procrastinated itself and the rest of the state into exasperation.

The legislators have engaged themselves in such serious business as presenting cow pies to each other and attacking a colleague for smoking marijuana, while carefully avoiding controversial issues.

MEANWHILE, trivial matters such as school finances and major appropriations bills have languished within the legislative mechanism and will have to be decided in a scheduled three-day wrap-up of the 1977 session.

It is amazing that such important legislation must be considered so late in the legislative session.

The 1977 session of the legislature has been described as do-nothing session.

UNFORTUNATELY, the facts support the description.

The legislators have carefully avoided acting upon any controversial issue and neglected to decide regular affairs of the state.

The legislators should be greeted with hoots of derision should they return to their home districts complaining of overwork.

Kansas deserves an efficient legislature that establishes priorities and deals with the legislation necessary for the state government to function before it considers controversial issues which are usually given cursory attention and then sent back to committee for consideration.

THE LEGISLATORS should examine their performance this session and resolve to improve their performance next year to improve the government of Kansas.

If they don't, they will be only be able to nod when they are collectively described as a do-nothing legislature.

Some good things do happen

Over the past several weeks some events have taken place which deserve applause louder than Ellis Rainsberger's first Big Eight football victory which, with luck, will come this season.

Maybe it's because I don't want to be branded as a critical columnist who sees only fault and never the good: So, this column will deal only with the good.

I'LL AVOID mentioning things like McCain Auditorium's air conditioning unit, which has no entrance to it. And now that it has broken down, workers have dug down the side of the building and will pound a hole in the foundation to get inside and repair the unit.

No, I won't mention things like that.

However, here are some of those good events that have happened.

—THE RILEY County Police Department made a number of arrests for heroin and other hard drugs. It should be applauded for not wasting our money and its time on marijuana and prostitution arrests.

—THE MANHATTAN City Commission, the Bikeway Advisory Committee and a K-State civil engineering class should be credited for the formation of a bike route, which will connect the campus, the city parks, some residential areas and downtown.

The $40,000 bikeway will be funded jointly by the federal government and the city commission. Maintenance will be funded from fees received from bicycle registration.

—THE UNITED States took a strong stand on its new 200-mile fishing limits. The United States took possession of two Russian fishing trawlers that allegedly disobeyed the new limit.

—THE CITY commission tabled the authorization of a $30,000 feasibility study for the provision of services across the Kansas River, an area southeast of Manhattan.

It was evident when Roger Fedde, southeast area resident, submitted a petition signed by 111 area residents indicating the services weren't wanted.

Eventually the commission will face the issue again and I hope they won't force something upon these people that the majority doesn't want.

—BLACK STUDENT Union realized money can be hard to come by these days and out their budget by $2,825. BSU's main decrease came in discontinuing funds for speakers. It felt the responsibility to bring in minority speakers should be shouldered by the University.

BSU also discontinued "Nuance," the minority student newspaper. It felt the Collegian should cover minority affairs better.

I hope other organizations will follow BSU's example.

—JOHN CHALMERS, vice president for academic affairs, and K-State's family and child development department are working on plans to renovate an old boarded-up house.

The plans call for making the house into a low-cost child-care center and development laboratory.

—THE UNITED States Postal Service is working its way out of the hole and finished one whole year with a financial surplus. With this surplus, it is doubtful if postal rates will rise until sometime in 1978.

All of these deserve a two-handed round of applause louder than a 21-bomb nuclear explosion.

Letter to the editor

Victims innocent

Editor,

Re: Bertie Johnson's letter to the editor in Wednesday's Collegian.

It is hard to believe that anybody could go through two years of college and have such a closed mind.

Thinking like Johnson's is what causes rape victims to hide the fact they have been attacked.

IT'S bad that far too many people share the same theory on rape. If a woman is attacked she is asking for it, right? I guess murder victims advertise the fact they want to be dead, huh?

How dare anyone question the woman's reasons for being at the K-State Athletic Residence Hall or her mode of attire?

The insinuations that this victim of an animalistic crime was drunk, dressed lewdly and offering her "goods for free" is incredible.

IF YOU know so much about this crime I suggest you talk to the campus police, Johnson, or else shut up—you're only adding to the stink of the false accusations floating around this campus.

Letters to the editor

Letter perpetuates myths

Editor,

In reference to Bertie Johnson's letter in Wednesday's Collegian, she concluded her letter with the statement: "One last thing ladies, get your facts together before revealing it to the public."

HOW about taking a little of your own advice? Where did you get concrete evidence that the females involved in the rapes were scantily clad, drunk and "loose as a goose?"

If Johnson's accusations are correct and she has proof that the ladies who were attacked are full of bull, maybe she should come forward with her first hand information.

Johnson sympathizes with the athletes because of the dehumanizing humiliation they are going through because of a stereotype of all athletes as sexual pervers.

WE'RE sure all of the athletes do not fit this stereotype, but conversely, we doubt if all the women who visit the K-State Athletic Residence Hall fit the stereotype you have pinned on them of advertising their goods and asking to be raped.

In her letter, Johnson said: "If a woman wants to be respected, she will be, if she doesn't she won't!" That is an archaic myth.

You sound like any woman who is raped was asking for it because she didn't respect herself. We hope you honestly believe that respect for yourself will save you from a similar situation someday. We doubt if it will!

Advertisements invite illegal acts

Editor,

Suppose the following advertisement were to appear in the Kansas City Star: Get rich quick; defraud strangers, acquaintances, even friends and relatives of their life savings. Write for our brochure describing 500 time-tested, guaranteed confidence games.

NO RESPONSIBLE editor would accept such an ad; but if an irresponsible one did accept it and if it could be demonstrated that someone had used the advertised materials to commit a crime, that editor would be liable to prosecution as an accessory before the fact.

Yet, on Monday, the Collegian published an ad inviting its readers to commit a kind of fraud—plagiarism—which violates the regulations of this and every other university. The nature and causes of suicide among college students... (Description of a research paper on this topic follows). This and 5,000 other unusually relevant research papers are described as above in our new 1977 mail-order catalogue. Send $1... (address of company follows).

BOTH advertisements invite behavior, which in the communities the newspapers serve, is illegal. Then what is the difference between the two cases?

We do not suggest that the Collegian staff be prosecuted as accessories to plagiarism, but we do suggest that, as spokesmen for the K-State student body, they pay stricter attention to the implications of what they print.

We most urgently suggest that no more advertisements of this kind be accepted.

FOR THE issue, finally, is not only a moral one. Every honest student who has ever had to compete against plagiarized work has been cheated.

Every student who would not, under any circumstances, buy a term paper should protest against an editorial policy which makes things easy for those who would—and do.

Letter angers reader, rape victim blameless

Editor,

After reading Bertie Johnson's letter to the editor in Wednesday's Collegian, it was extremely difficult for me to control the anger that followed.

Johnson continues to perpetuate sexist myths that have been spouted within society for centuries. Johnson says that athletes are human beings not animals, (an interesting observation) and then goes on to label the woman involved as a harlot! (my word choice, not Johnson's).

EVERYONE on this campus, including Johnson, seems to be forgetting one important fact: the young woman involved was not "made love to," she was raped!

Her body was taken by five men for their pleasure, against her will! Johnson needs to look deep into her own mind to see just who the "animals" really are!

I sincerely hope that the time never comes for Johnson to be confronted with the criminal act of rape. All of the sexist myths she so grandly listed—i.e., "she asked for it," she was probably wearing suggestive clothing, etc., etc., etc., ad nauseam, will come back to haunt her in full force.

JOHNSON has, in a sense, given any and all men a license to take what they want, when they want it, from whomever they want it!

Thanks Johnson, it is women like you who continue—along with sexist, bigoted males—to make this earth a hell for women in general.

WRC, Drug Ed, Touchstone face cuts

BY BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

Amendments which would eliminate tentative allocations to Women's Resource Center, Touchstone and Drug Education Center were submitted Tuesday for consideration tonight when Student Senate wraps up tentative allocation proceedings.

An amendment sponsored by E. J. Compton, agriculture senator, would eliminate the $730 tentative allocation to Women's Resource Center (WRC).

SENATE'S Finance Committee recommended the body not fund WRC, but senate last Thursday approved an amendment allocating the service $730.

"Originally I had voted for the amendment of $730, but after reviewing the entire budget I realized there had to be some cuts somewhere," Compton said.

Compton said she had talked to various students and asked them which social services they would like continued and which should be eliminated.

"It was unanimous that no one wanted Women's Resource Center," Compton said. "It really surprised me."

Two further amendments would eliminate funds to Drug Education Center, which was tentatively allocated $3,799, and Touchstone, which tentatively received a $1,720 allocation.

Another amendment would increase the public relations allowance in the Student Governing Association (SGA) budget from $1,300 to $1,540, and would increase SGA's allocation to $22,145.80.

Senate will also consider an amendment submitted Tuesday which would decrease the International Coordinating Council (ICC) allocation from $4,930 to $4,230. Most of the proposed $700 decrease was a $500 reduction in the group's $2,000 honorarium allowance.

STILL another amendment would decrease the Chicano student organization MEChA's honorarium allocation from $2,000 to $1,200.

Finance Committee had recommended the $1,200 figure but senate amended it to $2,000 during the tentative allocation proceedings.

FONE would receive funding for an assistant director for nine months if an amendment to increase that service's tentative allocation from $3,882 to $4,932.

Fone had requested the assistant director funding for nine months at $150 a month ($1350) but Finance Committee recommended funding for only two months. Senate approved the committee's recommendation during tentative allocations.

An amendment which would give the student attorney a four per cent merit increase in July will also be considered tonight.

FINANCE Committee Chairman Max Knopp said the biggest problem tonight will be keeping the meeting in order.

"I'm not trying to say that Cindy (Thomas, student senate chairman) won't be able to handle it, but there's going to be a lot of amendments and I'm afraid there's going to be some confusion," Knopp said.

"We're about $4,300 over (the $115,000 available) and I'd sure hate to see us go over that figure," he said. "We're going to have to find $4,300 somewhere and we're going to have to have quite a few cuts to get that."

Knopp said any money (senate allocates) over the amount the committee recommended must come out of senate's reserve account, which contains $11,000.

Tuesday was the deadline for submitting amendments to the tentative allocations bill. Senate tonight will consider no amendments from the floor unless they concern already submitted amendments.

Thieves drive off with phone wires

ATCHISON (AP)—Long distance telephone service was cut off at two small communities near Atchison in northeast Kansas when thieves stripped more than two miles of copper wire from poles in two locations.

Don Spiegel, a wire chief in Atchison for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., reported it received a trouble signal about 1 a.m. Wednesday.

About an hour later, he found a gap between Lancaster and Effingham where the wires had been stolen. Spiegel reported to the sheriff's office that a red pickup truck drove off as he arrived but he was unable to determine its make or get its license number.

Senate to decide on funding of ID Center for fiscal 1978

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

A proposal to fund the ID Center for the first six months of fiscal 1978 and hold the rest of its yearly allocation in reserves will go before Student Senate tonight.

The proposal would place $3,3036 of the total $11,890.96 allocation in reserves to give a senate task force time to investigate the method of funding and producing IDs.

The measure would allow the center $8,854.96 for fall registration and the fall semester.

The total allocation would be $829.04 less than the center's original $12,720 request. The task force reworked the center's budget and found some supplies the center had overlooked earlier, said Hank Spencer, task force member.

The task force was established after senate tabled the ID budget recommendation amid charges some of the new laminated ID cards fell apart after one year.

SPENCER, arts and sciences senator, said the task force will look into the production method, the efficiency and the funding of the cards.

"If we find the system we are using now is the best system then we will go ahead and give them the money in reserves," Spencer said.

"This is not to end the present system of IDs," said Melodi Dooling, task force member. "All the task force will do is investigate the system and report back to senate in November."

The money would be placed in reserves to keep some control over the funds, said Ken Allen, task force member.

"Money is usually placed in reserves if there is some question to its use," Allen said.

Indian craftsman to speak tonight

Pottery, embroidery, weaving and Indian figures by Lucy Lowden will be displayed today in the Union Little Theatre foyer.

Lowden will hold an informal discussion from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. and from 1 to 3 p.m. in the foyer. She also will speak at 8 tonight in the Union Little Theatre about her background and craft technique.

Lowden's art has brought her wide recognition with awards from the Heard Museum in Phoenix, the Inter-Tribal Indian Ceremonial in Gallup, N.M. and the Santa Fe Museum.

Her work is in permanent displays at the New Mexico State Fair, the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington, D.C. and numerous museums throughout the United States.

Lowden, a member of the Jemez Pueblo tribe in New Mexico, attended the United States Indian School in Albuquerque and later the University of New Mexico.

Faculty and students are welcome to attend. Lowden's appearance is sponsored by K-State's Native American Indian Student Body.

Grandson called for clarification of 'Robert's Rules'

BELLEVILLE, N.J. (AP)—When you can't find the answer in "Robert's Rules of Order" try Robert.

The book by Henry Robert is used in countless public forums every day to solve questions of parliamentary procedure.

But when the Board of Education here wanted a clarification on the meaning of an abstention, the answer couldn't be found in Robert's book. So the board called Robert's grandson.

Board Counsel Frank Pomoco said he reached Henry Robert III at his Annapolis, Md., home Tuesday night.

After about half an hour the phone call was adjourned, the meeting called back to order, and Robert's ruling imposed.

Recorder in Thompson Hall shows vibes of planet earth

By H.R. BEAL
Collegian Reporter

The east end of Thompson Hall houses a device which allows one to record the "vibes" of the entire planet.

It is the recording end of a seismograph and it registers vibrations of the earth as lines on a sheet of paper wrapped around a revolving cylinder. The lines remain fairly straight when there is no ground motion but when there is movement zig-zagging lines appear.

"You can tell when the 7:30 a.m. classes begin on campus," said Claude Shenkel, professor of geology.

The vibration picked up from this kind of activity is distinguished easily from those of an earthquake. The changes in the lines are minor.

THE SEISMOGRAPH is used by the geology department to study earthquakes and the waves of energy they produce.

An earthquake is a vibration of the ground produced by the rupturing of rock masses beneath the earth's surface. The energy released by these movements is transmitted through the earth in the form of waves. A seismograph records the intensity and duration of these waves, Shenkel said.

In order to record motions of any direction there are three seismographs. One records vertical motions and the others the east-west and north-south movements, Shenkel said.

The three seismographs are located in the basement of the McCain Auditorium addition and are anchored to the limestone bedrock. Wires run from these instruments to the recorder in Thompson Hall.

"They're in that position because we know they're on bedrock there and the bedrock transmits most of the shock," Shenkel said.

IN ADDITION to earthquakes, the seismograph records the continuous vibrations of the planet, called microseisms, and is sensitive enough to pick up vibrations from two people jumping on the basement floor of McCain Auditorium.

"We have literally thousands of small shocks bigger than microseisms, but as you go up to larger and larger shocks, those on a Richter scale magnitude of 7.5 to eight, there are only one or two a year, on the average," he said.

The largest earthquakes known in Kansas occurred in 1867 and 1902, both with an estimated magnitude of three to five on the Richter scale.

Cats head to Drake Relays

In an effort to salvage a relay victory on the Midwest Circuit (Texas, Kansas and Drake), K-State men's track team is beefing up its distance medley unit for the Drake Relays, Friday and Saturday.

"We figure that race is our best shot," said Mike Ross, K-State track coach, "particularly with our new lineup."

The foursome of Greg Schlatter (880-yards), Chris Muehlbach (440-yards), Tim Davis (1,320-yards) and Greg Glass (mile) the Cats finished fourth behind Arkansas, Texas and Minnesota in 9:42.5 at the Kansas Relays last weekend.

AT DRAKE, Ross will challenge with the combo of Roger Winter (880), Muehlbach (440), Bob Prince (1,320) and Glass (mile). K-State won the distance medley at Drake last year.

Ross said the other "good relay chance" K-State has is the 480-yard shuttle hurdle race.

"Since the shuttle relay is an event seldom included on the program, it's hard to guess but we have four pretty consistent hurdlers," Ross said.

Teaming up in the event for the Cats will be Vince Parrette, Mike Halpin, J.D. Hill and Louie Combs.

Hoping Prince is "ready to unleash a big one," Ross said he plans for the Sioux City senior to run in Drake's talent-loaded invitational 800-meter run.

ROSS PRAISED the recent performances of Glass, Muehlbach and jumper Darryl Bennett. Muehlbach dipped to a 47.0 relay quarter at Kansas, while Glass lowered his mile in a baton event to 4:05.3 and Bennett had a personal best 49-9½ in the triple jump.

Sports

The Cats will not send sprint medley or two-mile relay units to Drake.

"We plan to cut down on our volume of races in hopes that it will help the quality of our performances," Ross said.

WHILE THE men's team is going after the year's first relay victory on the circuit, K-State's 11-member women's contingent will be looking for their second win ever at the prestigious affair.

Teri Anderson won the mile for K-State back in 1972, but winning their second title won't be an easy task, said coach Barry Anderson, noting the caliber of talent competing.

"If we have some good times and distances and a couple of good placings, we'll be satisfied with our performances," he said.

Anderson said he feels his squad's best bet for an individual title rests with high jumper Diane Moeller. She won the event at Kansas last weekend with a school record 5-6¼, narrowly missing 5-7.

"Diane is jumping extremely well," Anderson said. "I look for her to go 5-8 sometime this season and this could be the time."

THE CATS send their sister team of Renee and Joyce Urish into a talented 1,500-meter field that will feature Francie Larrieu Lutz.

Renee, the younger of the two, had her hopes for a triple crown on the circuit shattered at Lawrence when she came in second behind Iowa State's Debbie Vetter in 4:24.7. Urish won the 1,500 at Texas in 4:30.15.

Joyce finished second to her sister at Texas with a 4:36.0 clocking and was fifth at Kansas in 4:34.0.

K-State's other shot at an individual crown rides with freshman ace Cindy Worcester in the 880 meters. She was sixth in the open invitational event at Kansas with a personal best time of 2:03.9.

"That's probably the best sixth place time ever ran, but Cindy didn't have a good race at Kansas," Anderson said. "I think she will run a smarter, better race this weekend."

Worcester and Renee Urish will join Jane Wittmeyer and Toni Mills for the mile relay and Worcester will run the 880 medley relay with Pat Osborn, Sharon McKee and Jan Smith.

Rounding out the Cats' team for Drake are shot putters Christy Tumberger and Linda Long, the duo that finished 2-3 respectively at Lawrence.

The rest of the women's squad will compete in a non-scoring triangular with Kansas and Nebraska at Lawrence this weekend.

Texas blanks K.C.

KANSAS (AP)—Juan Beniquez hit his first home run in two years and Bert Blyleven fired a seven-hitter despite a couple of shaky innings as the Texas Rangers blanked the Kansas City Royals 5-0 Wednesday night.

Blyleven, 2-2, was in trouble in the fifth and sixth innings but escaped each time.

Beniquez, the No. 9 batter in the Texas line-up, gave Blyleven all the runs he needed in the third inning with his three-run shot off Dennis Leonard.

K-State wins four on road

K-State's women's softball team swept two games from Iowa State Wednesday in Ames.

On Tuesday, the Cats won a four-team tournament in Des Moines, Iowa. K-State beat Grandview College, 10-4, and Central College of Iowa, 11-0, to win the tourney.

Nancy Gardner and Chris Gardner were winning pitchers.

In the first game of the ISU doubleheader, K-State scored two runs in the fourth inning on the way to a 2-0 victory. Betsy Locke singled and Janelle Poppe reached first on an error. Susie Norton then tripled to score the runs.

K-State had three hits and committed one error. Iowa State had three hits and five errors. Nancy Gardner, winning pitcher, was credited with eight strikeouts.

THE CATS beat the Cyclones in the second game, 6-2.

K-State connected for nine hits and committed three errors. The Cyclones had six hits and four errors.

The Cats scored three runs in the first inning. Patty Wendt and Poppe singled. Norton followed with another triple and Margo Jones singled Norton in.

ISU retaliated for two runs in their half of the first.

But K-State added two more runs in the second as Wendt singled and Locke reached base on a fielder's choice.

Poppe singled to score Wendt. Norton then singled to score Locke.

The Cats' final run came in the seventh. Norton scored when Margo Jones reached base on an error.

Chris Gardner was winning pitcher.

K-State's record is now 16-12. The Cats wrap up their season in a three-team round-robin Saturday at Emporia against Emporia State and Fort Hays State.

Baseball millionaires not paying dividends

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three weeks after the major league baseball season started, some of last winter's expensive free agents still are spinning their wheels.

Prominent among the disappointments so far are pitchers Wayne Garland, who received a 10-year $2.3 million contract from Cleveland, Don Gullett, who pocketed $2 million from the New York Yankees, reliever Bill Campbell, a million-dollar addition to the Boston Red Sox bullpen, and infielder Sal Bando, who got $1.4 million from the Milwaukee Brewers.

At the other end of the spectrum are Joe Rudi of the California Angels, Dave Cash of the Montreal Expos and Gary Matthews of the Atlanta Braves, who have celebrated their capitalist status with hot starts.

GARLAND CAME up with arm trouble in spring training and in his first two regular season starts surrendered eight runs and 13 hits in eight innings, for an inflated earned run average of 9.00.

Gullett suffered a twisted neck and ankle in his last start Tuesday night in Baltimore. After four games, his record is 1-2 and his ERA is a fat 6.37.

Campbell has accumulated some depressing numbers in Boston. The reliever had appeared in five games for the Red Sox through Tuesday, allowing 12 hits and nine earned runs in seven innings for an ERA of 11.57.

Bando, installed as the Brewer third baseman, only had 10 hits in his first 47 trips for Milwaukee and was batting .213.

Other ex-Oakland players are having better success. Rudi is batting .347 for California and leading the major leagues with 26 runs batted in. Teammates Don Baylor and Bobby Grich also are off to solid starts. Baylor is hitting .284, leads the American League in runs with 19 and in doubles with nine. He also has five home runs. Grich is at .263 and has slugged four homers.

TWO OTHER ex-A's, catcher Gene Tenace and reliever Rolie Fingers, have made a smooth switch to the National League San Diego Padres. Tenace is hitting .258 with seven extra base hits including three homers. Fingers has won two games, saved two others and has a 2.51 ERA for nine appearances.

Matthews has been the best free agent buy so far, batting .406 for Atlanta with 26 hits, second best total in the NL.

Cash, who departed Philadelphia for Montreal, also is off to a torrid start, hitting .345 for the Expos.

Ironically, some of the more successful free agents so far were among the cheapest ones.

Billy Smith of Baltimore had 15 hits in his first 32 at bats for a .469 start. Paul Dade is hitting .318 at Cleveland and Eric Soderholm has a .322 batting average with the Chicago White Sox.

Fire-fighter-city negotiations on union contract may stall

BY KEN MILLER
City Editor

Negotiations between Manhattan's fire fighters and the city of Manhattan are approaching a stalemate but the city isn't ready to declare an impasse and bring in a state mediator according to a fire fighters' union representative.

According to negotiating ground rules set by both sides before talks began, an impasse can't be declared in contract talks unless both sides agree negotiations have broken down.

ACCORDING to a representative of the International Association of Fire Fighters Local 2275, the firemen believe no more progress can be made in negotiations. City Manager Les Rieger, however, said the impasse hasn't been reached and talks will continue with the union.

Negotiations picked up this month where they left off when the contract was signed last July, with pay being a major point of contention between both sides, this year as well as last.

Last year's negotiations lasted four months and state and federal mediators were called in before the agreement was reached.

If both sides declare an impasse, a state (mediator) will be called in from the Kansas Public Employee Relations Board (PERB) to settle differences. If no agreement is reached with the state mediator a federal mediator may be called in. Final approval of any contract, however, rests with the Manhattan City Commission.

Negotiations broke down last summer over pay increases. The union originally asked for a 25 per cent pay increase and the city began by offering no increase. The union eventually dropped to 17.5 per cent and then to 11 per cent with the city coming up to 6.25 per cent before a 6.25 per cent pay increase was agreed on in late June.

THE UNION representative said PERB hasn't been called in yet but may be notified soon if the city decides negotiations have stalled. Paul Sasse, assistant to the city manager, said the city has no comment on current negotiations or on how soon the city may call in a mediator.

A union spokesman said this year's negotiations may be marked by many of last year's complaints. Fire fighters are concerned about a high personnel turnover, "about 33 per cent in the last two years" due to low salaries.

A former fire fighter said there is a possibility of a work slowdown, depending on how negotiations go although the union is prohibited by state laws from striking. "But," the former fire fighter said, "they may decide to go fight fires and do nothing else, like clean up the station."

Three blacks shot during riot

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—Three black youths suffered gunshot injuries Wednesday during demonstrations by students against government-imposed rent increases in the black township of Soweto.

Roving bands of black demonstrators set a beer hall on fire, looted a bread delivery truck and a soft drink truck and injured a policeman in a rock-throwing incident.

Police fired warning shots into the air and used tear gas to disperse crowds that numbered in the thousands and roamed the segregated township 10 miles southwest of Johannesburg, home for more than one million blacks.

POLICE CONFIRMED three youths were taken to a hospital suffering gunshot wounds, but a hospital spokesman declined comment on their condition.

Johannesburg police were put on standby alert, and whites were barred from entering Soweto. Riots in the township last June sparked black uprisings that, in four months, caused the deaths of 370 blacks and three whites and injured thousands across white-governed South Africa.

WEDNESDAY'S demonstrators protested Soweto rent increases amounting to 30 to 80 per cent. One crowd of about 2,000 demonstrated outside one of Soweto's biggest high schools with students carrying placards declaring "down with capitalism" and "we won't pay."

Police used tear gas to disperse the crowd.

Aerial fire ladder out of commission

The Manhattan Fire Department's aerial fire truck, which has been bothered by mechanical difficulties for the past year, has broken down again and may not be repaired for another week.

Fire chief Bill Smith said the truck is still able to go on fire calls but the ladder is disfunctional. It's the only ladder in the department which can reach over 50 feet. Without it, the city won't be able to effectively fight a fire above 50 feet, Smith said.

"Hopefully, we'll have the truck repaired this week," Smith said.

Smith said the ladder has been used "about four or five times" in the truck's 10 years of operation, most recently in the Wildcat Creek Apartment fire last Spring.

The truck will be checked by a representative of Seagraves Co. of Columbus, Ohio, its manufacturer, when the company's mechanic next comes to Manhattan. A Seagraves representative said earlier this year, when rumors of sabotage were circulating in the fire department, that a mechanic could be flown to Manhattan in 24 hours if necessary.

House committee approves grant to model solar farms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Agriculture Committee approved Wednesday a five-year, $20-million grant program for model farms that use solar energy for electricity and heating.

The Senate Agriculture Committee, meanwhile, voted to freeze government support prices for peanuts at $420 a ton for the next five years instead of letting the support drop to $400 a ton by 1981 as the administration wanted. The current support price is $440 a ton.

BOTH programs would be part of the omnibus legislation the committees are writing to replace laws governing major farm and feeding programs that expire Sept. 30.

The Senate committee also rejected the Carter administration's recommendation for an income-supporting target price for soybeans — a system already in use for wheat, feed grains, cotton and rice. However, it did adopt a minimum $4-a-bushel price-support loan rate for soybeans for the next five years. The administration backed a $4 rate next year but wanted flexibility in future years.

UNDER target prices, USDA makes direct payments to farmers whenever the market price of the crop is less than the target price.

Under price-support loans, farmers borrow cash at the rate specified by the law, using the crop they want to grow or market as collateral. When the market price is above the rate, they normally pay off the loan and sell the crop. The loan rate thus becomes the price floor for the crop.

The soybean loan rate now is $2.50 a bushel, and the $4 adopted was what Carter sought.

Accessory to murder suspect waives her extradition rights

NEW BERN, N. C. (AP)—A young New Bern woman charged with accessory to murder in the disappearance of two Craven County construction workers has waived extradition from Abilene, where she was arrested Tuesday with a male companion also charged in the case.

TERESA Westbrook Powers, 20, will be returned to New Bern within the next few days to face charges of accessory before and after the fact of murder, according to Craven County Sheriff Bruce Edwards. William Barber, 22, of New Bern, charged with murder, was wounded during the arrest and has not yet been confronted with extradition proceedings, the sheriff said Wednesday. "Barber has been hospitalized and it will be a few days before we know about him," Edwards said. Barber underwent surgery on an artery severed by a police bullet that entered his left arm during a struggle with Abilene police, the sheriff said. "If he does waive his extradition rights, it will be eight to 10 days before he can be released from the hospital," Edwards said.

MEANWHILE, the search continued for Wade William White, 21, of New Bern, and Joseph Michael Taylor, 22, of Jasper. They were last reported seen about 7 p.m. April 5 by Beverly Ann Goodrich, 17, who was charged Monday with accessory after the fact of murder. Edwards said he thinks the two men were killed within three or four hours after Goodrich said she last saw them. The sheriff said all that has turned up in the way of physical evidence were partially burned wallets and other personal items belonging to the missing men.

Protesters hold HEW; win help from groups

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Tenacious handicapped demonstrators said Wednesday their 23-day sit-in has helped people realize that "we can do what anyone else can do"—and one result is material support from organizations as varied as the Teamsters and Black Panthers.

The 125 protesters, some blind, some crippled, some deaf, have set up housekeeping in the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare regional offices here with improvised showers, cleanup squads and donated groceries.

TYPICAL of community support was the appearance Tuesday of Allan Baird, president of Teamsters Local 921. He strode down the cluttered hallway toward the demonstrators, a grin on his face and, in his hand, a $100 check from used car salesmen.

"This demonstration has made people realize that we can do what anyone else can do, not only by sitting in, but by expressing what we want and asking for what is ours," said Linda Gill, a partially sighted 25-year-old from Berkeley, Calif.

"We've made people realize that because someone has a disability it doesn't make them helpless or ignorant."

The handicapped coalition occupied the building April 5 and has vowed to remain until HEW Secretary Joseph Califano signs regulations banning discrimination against handicapped persons in any activity receiving federal funds.

"We're determined," said Gill. "It's not like we want something impossible or unreasonable. It means our basic civil rights."

SHE SAID the Teamsters, Safeway stores, Black Panther party and others have given the protesters food and money during the long siege.

North Sea oil leak still out of control

STAVANGER, Norway (AP)—A team of oilmen Wednesday came within one crucial step of capping the five-day-old runaway oil well in the North Sea but quit for the day because of fatigue after six hours of perilous work.

The Phillips Petroleum Co., Oklahoma-based operators of the rig in Norway's Ekofisk oilfield, said attempts to cap the well would be resumed Thursday, weather permitting.

"All steps in the operation require fresh, well-rested people," a Phillips spokesman said.

Spewing 36,000 gallons of oil and shale an hour since Friday, the broken well has formed an oil slick estimated to cover 150 square miles in the middle of the North Sea's prime fishing grounds.

TWO TEXANS from Red Adair's Houston-based team of oil well troubleshooters, Boots Hansen and Richard Hattberg, worked with five assistants on the Bravo rig from daybreak until early afternoon.

The Phillips spokesman said they were one step away from activating "blind rams," half-moon-shaped steel discs that would close off the flow of oil.

The spokesman said the crew became fatigued while wrestling with ram doors that gave access to the discs. One was difficult to move because of a balky gasket.

The men returned to their headquarters on the barge Chocaw. The barge is holding a load of special heavy mud ready to be pumped into the well to reduce the oil pressure once the blowout is capped.

Efforts to stem the gusher were curtailed in the past two days by gale-force winds or lack of wind. A calm Tuesday created a dangerous buildup of suffocating and volatile gas around the stricken rig, forcing the men off after six hours of work. The conditions Wednesday were described as ideal, with a soft breeze blowing away the gas.

A NORWEGIAN government spokesman said by midmorning Tuesday the well had flushed more than 4.7 million gallons of oil into the sea, but he estimated that about 1.8 million gallons have evaporated.

Norwegian officials reported at midmorning the slick was shaped like a Chile bean, 31 miles long and 12 and one-half miles wide. One part was drifting south and another appeared stationary about 150 miles from the Norwegian coast, 160 miles from Denmark and 205 miles from Britain.

Rape panel discussion stresses sex roles

Rape always doesn't occur behind bushes or in dark parking lots.

Many rapes are "social rapes" which grow out of friendships, said Caroline Peine, instructor in the Center for Student Development.

Peine and five others participated in a panel discussion on social rape last night in the Union as part of women's awareness week sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

To constitute rape, there must be some type of force, said Tony Jurich, associate professor of family and child development.

"An assault is when the act becomes the will of only one person," he said. "Sex is the will of two people. Rape is the will of one."

Jurich said many social rapes result after drinking alcohol.

The first parts of the brain to be affected by alcohol are the frontal lobes, which control a person's ability to think ahead and make moral judgments, he said.

"If the girl loses the ability to think ahead—specifically nine months—and loses the ability to make moral judgments, you can see how things can happen," Jurich said.

American society has a double standard concerning sex, Jurich said. There is a standard for women which says they should have no sex before marriage. Then there is a standard for men which says they must have sex before marriage.

When both sexes try to fulfill those socialized sex-roles, someone has to give, which is where social rape comes into the picture, Jurich said.

"A girl wants to be sexy enough to interest somebody, but not too sexy that they won't want to take you home to mother," said Cornelia Flora, associate professor of sociology.

Jurich said men also can be socially raped. The social situation is what rapes the guy, he said. The male may be afraid that if he doesn't make the first move, the woman will think he is sexually inadequate.

Constrictor corralled in car

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP)—A motorist on Interstate 80 near here called police Wednesday to report that he was having trouble driving—because his pet boa constrictor had slipped from its cage and was wriggling around in the car.

Iowa state troopers Don Mott and Steve Badger helped the driver corral the snake, but apparently did so with different degrees of enthusiasm.

According to Mott, "Trooper Badger says it was four feet long, but he's afraid of snakes. I say it was two feet long, but I'm not afraid of them."

Cold pushes trade into record deficit

WASHINGTON (AP)—A 22 per cent increase in oil imports resulting from an unusually cold winter pushed United States trade into a record monthly deficit of $2.4 billion in March, the government reported Wednesday.

The trade deficit for the first three months of 1977 totaled $5.9 billion, which was greater than the entire 1976 deficit and close to the record yearly deficit of $6.4 billion in 1972.

COURTNAY Slater, chief Commerce Department economist, said the growing deficits are almost entirely the result of increasing oil imports from the oil-exporting nations.

"Everybody recognizes the deficit is with OPEC countries..."

Our trade with the rest of the world is in pretty healthy shape," she said. OPEC is the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, of which Saudi Arabia is the key member.

The Carter administration saw the March trade report as additional ammunition for the energy program that the President proposed last week. "This underscores the importance of energy conservation and the reducing of dependence on foreign oil," said Slater.

Total imports of all goods, including oil, were valued at just under $12.5 billion in March, while exports were nearly $10.1 billion, leaving a deficit in United States trade accounts of $2.4 billion.

THE NATION had deficits of $1.8 billion in February and $1.7 billion in January, which were also monthly records at the time. The entire deficit for all of 1976 was just under $5.9 billion.

While Slater said she expects substantial monthly deficits will continue for the remainder of this year. She added, "It is reasonable to expect some leveling off" of oil imports now that spring is here.

Both imports and exports were up in March. Exports for the year were running at an annual rate of $117.9 billion, about three per cent above last year, while imports were at an annual rate of $14.6 billion, 17 per cent above the 1976 total.

At that rate, the nation would end 1977 with a whopping deficit of $23.7 billion.

The Commerce Department said total imports of petroleum and petroleum products during March were valued at just under $4.1 billion, up from slightly more than $3.3 billion in February. The trade figures were adjusted for seasonal variations.

TOTAL petroleum imports during the first three months amounted to 840 million barrels valued at nearly $11 billion. At the same time last year, imports were 619 million barrels, valued at $7.4 billion.

For all of 1976, petroleum imports were 2.6 billion barrels valued at $32.2 billion.

Meanwhile, the government had encouraging news for the economy in a report that showed productivity of American workers rose at the fastest rate in a year during the first three months of 1977.

An increase in productivity reduces price pressure since it means workers are producing more goods without an increase in labor costs.

Kansas house overrides tax veto

TOPEKA (AP)—A large number of Republicans joined House Democrats Wednesday in voting to override Gov. Robert Bennett's veto on an income tax "reform" bill, 89-32.

The Senate will take up the veto Thursday morning and predictions were that the result will be close.

IT WILL take 27 votes in the 40 member senate to pass the bill into law over the Bennett veto. Republicans hold a 21-19 edge in Senate membership.

The bill would increase individual state income tax exemptions from $600 to $750, bringing the state exemption to the same level as the federal exemption.

It also would add higher income tax branches that would mean tax increases for an estimated six per cent of the state's taxpayers.

REP. JAMES Slattery (D-Topeka), chief sponsor of the bill, told the House, "the choice is whether we want to give a little relief to 75 per cent of the taxpayers of the state or protect six per cent of the taxpayers."

"If we do, we are confirming what a lot of people suspect, that we are helping those who can help themselves and turning our backs on those who need help."

Republicans taking the floor to urge the House to sustain the governor's veto argued principally that it could reduce state revenues by an estimated $4 million over the next two years and possibly make it necessary for the legislature to increase taxes.

He suggested the legislators will look funny voting to reduce taxes for 75 per cent of the people now and then coming back later to increase taxes.

REP. JAMES Braden (R-Wakefield) said the bill "doesn't do much for anybody and will cost the state a lot of money."

Rep. Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs) castigated the governor and some Republicans for suggestions that the legislators have been wildly overspending the governor's budget.

Weaver said that with school finance and a few other items yet to be decided, the legislature is about $2.8 million over the governor's recommendations for the 1977 fiscal year budget and some $6.4 million below the governor's recommendations on the fiscal 1978 budget.

"We're going to come out pretty close to the governor's recommended budget figure," said Weaver.

Weaver charged the governor has been inconsistent in his statements charging the legislature with wild overspending while coming up with proposals for a massive program of buildings, including new state office buildings in Kansas City, Topeka and possibly Wichita.

Senate cuts Drug Ed Center budget

By THE SGA STAFF

After losing funding for its assistant director's position two weeks ago, the Drug Education Center (DEC) last night received an additional $249 cut in its tentative allocation as Student Senate wound up spring tentative allocations.

DEC's tentative allocation now stands at $3,550. Senate had earlier approved a $3,799 budget for the service.

"I feel like Student Senate broke our leg last month and tonight they took away our crutches," said John Leslie, DEC director. "That's all I have to say."

During debate, Leslie defended the service's justifications for the items senate cut: telephone, membership dues, equipment, office supplies and printing.

"I'm not opposed to any cuts if you can make them within reasonable guidelines," Leslie said. "If you're going to cut, look deeper."

"DRUG Education is moving away from the educational aspects toward crisis situations," said Rachel Masters, arts and sciences senator and sponsor of an unsuccessful amendment which would have eliminated funding to DEC.

"Drug Education took it upon themselves to rework the situation," Masters said. "I don't think we need two crisis centers on campus—FONE is doing a good job."

Senate-funded groups can spend up to 25 per cent of their tentative allocation between July 1 and final allocations in October.

Current projections give senate about $110,000 to allocate to non-line item groups, but additional money is expected for final allocations because many groups return excess funds to senate at the end of the fiscal year.

Senate also approved a four per cent salary increase for Student Attorney Nyles Davis, which will take effect July 1.

THE SALARY increase, from $11,100 to $11,520, was labeled a cost of living increase. If senate had not approved this now, Davis' salary could not have been increased until July 1, 1978.

Senate also narrowly defeated an amendment which would have increased the Student Governing Association's tentative allocation $240 from $21,905.80 to $22,145.80, but only after the body reconsidered an earlier affirmative vote at the end of last night's session.

The increase would have been used to fund two additional full-page Student Governing Association (SGA) advertisements in the Collegian.

Senate last week had approved funding for only two full-page advertisements, but, during the first vote on the amendment, 22 senators last night wanted four pages and 20 did not.

THEN, at the close of last night's meeting, sentiment grew to reverse the vote and a new poll showed 21 opposed and 18 in favor.

During the first round of debate, some senators argued against the increase, saying the SGA ads were ineffective when they were used last year.

"These SGA pages have no effect as far as I'm concerned," said Randy Groves, engineering senator. "I used to throw them away and I imagine most other students did."

Myra Randell, home economics senator who led the late drive to kill the amendment, said public relations was the recently appointed communications committee's responsibility.

"We've just formed a new communications committee," Randell said. "It's in its baby stage. If we pass the amendment, we are saying we have no faith in our new committee."

Fire regulations will limit dormitory room construction

By JANE HIGGINS
and TERRY BRUNGARDT
Collegian Reporters

Room construction in K-State residence halls will not be as elaborate next year as it has been in the past.

Some room construction doesn't comply with the 1970 Life-Safety code, said Floyd Dibbern, state fire marshal. "Evidently, someone has not been enforcing the code," he said.

"Students are putting the Board of Regents and the state in a tough situation. If a student loses his life, a lawsuit could be pending," Dibbern said. "The state is putting their necks on the line when they let students build their rooms up."

"I think the new regulations are saying that the construction we've done in the past 10 years was dangerous, and that we are fools for what we've done," said Mike Hess, Haymaker Hall president.

The State Department of Housing compiled a list of room remodeling regulations to comply with guidelines suggested by Dibbern which will be requirements next fall. Residence halls were handed a list of the six regulations Thursday.

The regulations will eliminate elevated floors, elevated beds above the height of standard bunk beds now in some halls, obstructed doorways, additional electrical wiring and construction that obstructs convector units. Also, any materials used in construction must have a flame spread number greater than 75.

"A flame spread number is a timing device to determine how fast a flame will spread out along a material," said Lloyd Davenport, maintenance engineer for K-State housing.

This regulation will eliminate the use of some old barn wood and some paneling, Thomas Frith, director of housing said.

Plastic and burlap will not meet the requirements, Hess said.

Jim Putnam, director of Haymaker Hall, said the rules will have to be clarified before they go into effect next fall.

"It is impossible to explain to non-architecture or non-engineering students the flame spread rule because of the technicality of the situation," Putnam said. "It will take time to write out the rules in layman's terms so they know what's going on."

Residents will be given a set of guidelines before they go home for the summer so they can plan for the fall semester, Putnam said.

The new regulations will affect returning residents to the point that many will have to change their room plans to comply, he said.

"It will be a new challenge to see how residents can still individualize their rooms within the new constraints put on them," he said. "Approximately 50 per cent of the residents of Haymaker are now in direct violation of the six new regulations."

Hess said some residents of Haymaker are wishing they had known of the new construction before they signed their housing contracts for next semester.

Close to 75 per cent of Haymaker's residents returned from last year, Putnam said. He (see HAYMAKER, page 7)

Drop deadline today

Today is the last day to drop a course.

Students will receive grades for all classes not dropped by today, according to Don Foster, director of student records.

"It is University policy that you can't drop courses during the last two weeks of classes," he said.

All students wanting to drop a class, except students from the College of Arts and Sciences, must take a drop-add form signed by their advisers to their dean's offices. Arts and sciences students take the signed form directly to the registration section in the basement of Farrell Library.

WASHINGTON—First Lady Rosalynn Carter had a benign lump removed from her breast Thursday afternoon, the White House announced.

Doctors discovered the non-cancerous growth during Mrs. Carter's regular six-month checkup at Bethesda Naval Hospital and surgically removed it immediately, said the First Lady's press secretary, Mary Finch Hoyt.

Hoyt said Mrs. Carter, 49, returned to the White House about 5 p.m. after the brief operation.

"She is up and about and in great spirits. This will not affect her schedule," she said.

The First Lady's predecessor, Betty Ford, lost her right breast to surgery in September 1974 after a similar routine examination at the naval hospital in suburban Maryland disclosed the presence of a cancerous growth. In addition, Happy Rockefeller, wife of Gerald Ford's vice president, lost both breasts to cancer.

LONDON—In a report critical of Carter administration policies, an authoritative research institute said Friday that the Soviet Union is steadily building and modernizing its military power while the West wavers.

The International Institute for Strategic Studies said in its annual survey that President Carter's disarmament policies "smacked of obsolete concepts" and his human rights statements had destroyed the cordiality and trust in East-West relations.

The institute's study of the world military balance also said that in contrast to backing the West, the Soviet arms buildup has gone ahead and "in almost every area seems to outpace the intensity and scope of Western military programs."

The institute founded in 1958 as an independent center for research on security, defense and arms control, has a staff and membership drawn from more than 60 countries.

TOPEKA—The Kansas Senate rejected Thursday a program for free medical education at the University of Kansas Medical School for students who agreed to practice in the state.

On a 14-20 standing vote, the Senate refused to adopt amendments by its own Ways and Means Committee encompassing provisions of the program. The bill then was passed, 38-1.

Left intact, the bill would have payment of $6,000 per year for students of osteopathic medicine who agree to practice for two years in the state.

The bigger program advanced by the Ways and Means Committee would have offered students who enrolled in the "Medical Service of Kansas" free medical educations at the med school.

In return, those students when they entered practice would have to practice in Kansas for four years in a medically-underserved area or six years if they went elsewhere in the state.

WASHINGTON—Mail delivery six days per week is an extravagance that the United States can no longer afford, the chairman of the postal study commission said Thursday.

Gaylord Freeman, chairman of the Commission on Postal Service, defended the panel's report that last week recommended cutting back to five-day delivery while increasing the taxpayers' subsidies of the Postal Service.

Freeman, retired chairman of the First National Bank of Chicago, told a House Post Office subcommittee that specialists in postal affairs and in electronic communications had told the commission that the Postal Service in its present form cannot survive "unless postal rates rise beyond a politically and publicly acceptable level or unless subsidies are greatly increased."

In its report, the commission found that even under its recommendations for reduced service and higher subsidies, the price for mailing a first-class letter will have to be increased from the present 13 cents to around 22 cents by 1985.

Controlled exports aid nonproliferation

In a special message to Congress Wednesday President Carter asked for quick enactment of a law regulating United States exports of uranium.

Carter said he fears the current policy is too weak and could lead to unregulated use of nuclear products in developing explosive devices.

Many of the current members of the world community have become users of nuclear energy with the aid of U.S. technology and materials. Some of these same countries have also developed explosive capabilities as a direct result of knowledge exported for peacetime uses.

It is this country's policy to support nuclear non-proliferation. For this reason Carter has asked that legislation ban export of uranium reprocessing plants capable of producing the plutonium that is used in nuclear weapons.

The U.S., however, is not the only supplier of nuclear technology. Therefore this country must not impose safeguards so severe as to drive away demand from current foreign purchasers. The law Carter believes must offer incentives so that current supply agreements will be continued and future agreements will remain attractive.

Under the proposal, any nation which detonates a nuclear device or fails to abide by safeguards for uranium usage established by the International Atomic Energy Agency, will be denied U.S. exports.

The legislation is aimed at making the United States sole producer of reprocessed uranium by insuring supplies to countries with developing nuclear potential.

In a matter as serious as possession of plutonium manufacturing plants, no country less stable than the U.S. should be trusted. Reprocessing the world's uranium is a job that should be restricted to as few members of the world community as possible.

Carter's proposal is an excellent way to achieve this end.

All quiet at Cockroach Haven

I was persuaded to write this column when one of the Editorial Gods promised me (among other gifts), he'd fumigate my home: Cockroach Haven.

That really isn't necessary now. The cockroaches and I are co-existing peacefully these days. And I confess, the battle that raged in my house for the last year and a half was my fault, not theirs.

The trouble was, my mother kept a bug-less home, so I wasn't familiar with the little brown guys. Or, as a psychologist would explain: I'd never interacted or relayed any communications within either a social or personal context with the roaches; thus, there was no ongoing dialogue. How sad.

The result of this deficiency in my upbringing was, when I moved into the Haven, I energetically set about to destroy the cockroaches, thinking they were my enemies.

ALONG WITH my first purchase of groceries when I moved in were 10 or 15 cans of Raid. To my dismay, this didn't faze them. I was a rookie, you understand.

Next, I tried swabbing the floors and ceilings with a combination of chloridane and Black Flag—to no avail. After only a week, they were able to discard their gas masks and continue plundering, at will, the stock of stale "hamburger surprise" I kept idling on the stove.

Letter to the editor

Coverage should stop

Editor,

I have read with interest the continuing build-up in the Collegian concerning the alleged rape in the K-State Athletic Residence Hall on March 30.

Also the many letters to the editor have proved quite enlightening. But how long does it have to last?

AS FAR as I can see every possible angle on the matter has been cornered and verbally beaten to death.

There is no need to continue the barrage of letters and articles on athletes, officials and other people involved.

The case is in the hands of the police. Let justice take its course. There is no reason to continue kicking a dead dog.

Greg Riepl
Junior in geology

Violence is the tool of the ignorant and I responded accordingly.

My next tactic was to spray a little roach killer (hah!) around the baseboards of the kitchen, turn off the lights and retreat into an adjoining room.

I'd wait until I could hear the little bastards choking and gasping as they writhed on the kitchen floor; then I'd flick on the lights, rush into the room, and in a dignified manner, proceed to club them into brown mush with a 36-ounce Louisville Slugger.

FORTUNATELY for the floor and my pocketbook (I shattered a lot of bats), my landlord vetoed this insanity—ditto on the knife throwing method.

He also nixed my "John Wayne" technique. This involved carrying the violence of the baseball bat approach to its logical conclusion: guns.

Again, after I'd sprayed with roach bomb and then lowered the lights, I'd retire to the living room and recline in my chair.

When the roaches stumbled out onto the floor, I'd switch on the large flashlight glued to my KC Royals cap and blast away with my brother's .38 Smith and Wesson Special.

I killed a hell of a lot of roaches that way, but it was another case of win the battle, lose the war.

When I returned from Christmas break this semester, for whatever reason, I was accorded a hero's welcome. The little guys met me at the door and helped carry in my clothes, stereo equipment and the groceries.

THAT night we all sat around, got loaded and listened to Patti Smith albums.

The next morning, before they woke up, I lit enough bug bombs to properly fumigate a castle and fled the house.

I paused long enough to glance back inside to see hundreds of hungover, panic-stricken roaches scurrying about.

You're right, it didn't work. I was up to my knees in dead cockroaches, but there still seemed to be more than ever. Our food bill was skyrocketing, too.

And then I found a way to end the cockroach problem forever—compromise.

Everytime I buy some food, I set half aside for them. For every album I buy, they get one and so on: it's a 50-50 marriage of reason.

I've still got cockroaches, but at least I'm not spending a fortune on shells and Black Flag; and no one calls me Adolph Eichmann when I walk in the house, either.

a round of one-handed applause

...goes to the geniuses who designed McCain Auditorium. The designers dreamed of an aesthetically pleasing structure without windows marring its clean lines. To provide fresh air for the building's occupants, the designers added an air conditioner which was conveniently placed in the basement. At the outset of this year's warm weather, occupants of McCain sighed gratefully as they waited for cooling breezes to waft from the air conditioning ducts.

THE COOLING breezes never came. The air conditioning unit the designers had thoughtfully provided had broken down.

A stalwart crew of repairmen intent upon fixing the unit advanced with tools in hand to McCain's basement, but immediately met an obstacle.

The designers had placed the unit in a doorless room.

While the denizens of McCain swelter, workmen are knocking a hole in the foundation of the building so they can get to the air conditioning unit to repair it.

Thus, for designing a windowless building with an air conditioner sequestered in a doorless room, the designers of McCain receive a one-handed round of applause quieter than the broken air conditioner.

Columnist off base

Editor,

Re: Pat McFadden's column "Manhattan's Macho Meat Market" in Tuesday's Collegian.

I agree that the purpose of the Miss Manhattan-K-State pageant is to make money, but I disagree that it was done badly.

The Manhattan Jaycees are the unnamed "promoters," McFadden referred to in the column and the pageant was a financial success in spite of two other events scheduled in town on the same night.

THE INCOME from the pageant was not for profit but to allow children with cerebral palsy to attend a special summer camp and to provide Manhattan youngsters with a new bicycle moto-cross course.

I cannot accept the suggestion that the pageant be changed to be more like the shows that used to appear at the Brown Bottle.

Whether or not McFadden knows it, the Brown Bottle was not padlocked by Vern Miller or chopped-up by Carrie Nation, it went broke.

If the Jaycees are not putting on a program that the public wants to see, the forces of the marketplace will make it disappear.

children to be subjected to her brand of "education."

THE DISGUSTING "blaming the victim" mentality is frightening enough, but for this discriminatory idea to be presented to students in "early childhood" is down-right panic producing.

Does the jeweler get blamed after a robbery for "asking for it" by having his "goods" in the window? Or for being in the "wrong part of town?"

Of course not. As adults we are responsible for our own behavior. Temptation does not legitimize moral or legal transgression.

AS FOR why women often do not report rape incidents, one might re-read Johnson's letter to the editor for a clue as to what kind of abuse is in store—from other women as well as men.

Greek play is an entertaining peek at endless war between the sexes

By KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

Unusual costumes and excellent delivery of comic lines makes "Lysistrata," interesting and controversial. The play is presented by the K-State Players and will be performed Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m.

"Lysistrata," was written by Aristophanes in the fifth century and centers around a method contrived by the women of Greece to end the civil war.

Lysistrata is the woman who calls all the women of Greece together to ask their cooperation in ending the war by denying to have sex with their husbands until they cease fighting.

THE COSTUMING plays a large part in the understanding of the play. The men wear red false phalluses which come in various sizes. The women wear large false breasts and floral arrangements for pubic hair.

When the women refuse the men, the men's phalluses are worn in a position of erection, indicating how much they miss their wives.

The phalluses are quite noticeable and could be offensive to some viewers.

The aspect of the phalluses could have been deemphasized without losing the effect. Simply a bulge in the robes would have served the same purpose without being quite as explicit.

ALL THE characters wear fat suits constructed of foam rubber to give them a cartoon appearance. The suits are successful, but at times appear lumpy and misshapen instead of creating the smooth, unbroken line for which they were designed.

The acting is excellent. Delivery of comic lines requires a knack of timing and intonation which the performers have mastered.

The actors were animated and varied in their vocal delivery with natural and flowing movements which did not seem contrived.

Lysistrata is played by Vicky Oliver, junior in psychology. She plays the dominating, powerful woman well by carrying herself with pride and delivering her lines like the dedicated woman she is portraying.

MYRRHINE, a friend of Lysistrata, and also dedicated to the cause, is portrayed by Velina Houston, sophomore in journalism. She is especially conniving in one seduction scene with her husband, Kinesias.

Mark Pennington, freshman in pre-design professions, was disappointing in his portrayal of Kinesias. He seemed to miss the macho aura which would have made his part more dynamic.

The entire play, although written for a fifth century audience, seems timeless. The constant sexual innuendo appeals to today's audience as well as the original audience.

Despite the explicit costuming, the play is entertaining and interesting. The lines are delivered with flair and sensitivity to reveal their underlying humor. The actors have achieved full characterizations which adds dimension and depth to the play. The performance never lags and is funny throughout.

Some may be offended, but many more will be amused.

'Cold' city spawns psychopath

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Taxi Driver," will be shown Sunday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in the Union Forum Theatre. Admission price is $1.25.

By SCOTT DOWNIE
Collegian Reviewer

The Collegian eye went to the movies the other day and saw "Taxi Driver." How did it fare (it had to be asked)? Very well.

"Taxi Driver," revolves around Robert DeNiro who plays Travis, an ex-marine who's only ambition is to remain busy. So, to fill out his 16-hour-a-day, six-or-seven day a week schedule, he gets a job as a taxi driver. His work overexposes him to an environment he already despises, New York City. He has to deal with prostitutes, pushers, ineffective policemen, "scum" and "crud" continuously. It doesn't appear to be a nice place to live or visit.

CYBIL SHEPHERD enters as

Betsy, a high-class campaign organizer for a Presidential candidate. Travis spies her through the campaign headquarters window and decides she is an angel, a person above the standard slimy level of human existence. However, he soon is forced to realize that their backgrounds, interests and present situations are incompatible. She, he decides, is just another cold face in the crowd.

Shortly after this brief encounter, Travis figures that it is time to do "something." He turns himself into a walking arsenal with guns and knives attached everywhere.

HIS EARLY encounter with Iris (Jody Foster), a young prostitute, develops into a series of crossed paths until he finally decides to free her from her pimp, "Sport" (Harvey Keitel).

At this point, the little pieces that have dripped from the action of the movie begin to coagulate and the final scenes are enacted.

The finale, however improbable it may be, is a punch in the gut that you had seen coming for an hour.

A word of warning: If you are easily offended or squeamish, this movie may not be for you. There are some genuinely gory scenes which, combined with the content, have quite an impact on the stomach, not to mention the brain.

Pink Panther return is fun comedy

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Return of the Pink Panther" will be shown Friday and Saturday at 7 and 9:45 p.m. in the Union Forum Theatre. Admission price is $1.25.

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Collegian Reviewer

Peter Sellers has perhaps epitomized the bumbling, clumsy part of us all with his alter ego, Inspector Clouseau.

Clouseau, the world renowned detective is the only man capable of snaring the cagey thief in the Pink Panther series of films.

In "Return of the Pink Panther," Clouseau once again is on the trail of the criminals and his capture of the thieves promises to make the world safe from deviancy.

A WORLD famous diamond is stolen from a Moroccan museum by the phantom thief.

Clouseau is called upon to retrieve the diamond and after a rollicking chase through Switzerland, the diamond is recovered and the thieves apprehended.

Seller is superb as Clouseau. As we watch him stumble through life, we can't help but laugh because he represents all of us bumbler, clods and blunderheads.

CHRISTOPHER PLUMMER and Catherine Schell, partners in crime, and Herbert Lom, the chief inspector, were good and helped Clouseau make himself that much clumsier.

Those unfamiliar with Clouseau may be enlightened by the chief inspector's impression when he said, "Compared to Clouseau, Attila the Hun was a Red Cross volunteer."

"The Return of the Pink Panther," is a slapstick scream and it is a film worth seeing because it enables one to laugh at himself.

Dinglefest satirizes society

The Dinglefest Theatre Company will present "Guessworks," Tuesday at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

The satirical comedy portrays the complexities of our society and our futile attempts to remain unconfused.

In "Guessworks," the company uses contemporary, common and unusual printed materials in a manner which restructures, contradicts and exaggerates their original intentions.

This "verbatim technique" was created by the Dinglefest company. It relies solely on the voices and bodies of the actors to relay their satiric message.

Tickets for the performance are available in the McCain Auditorium box office. General admission prices are $5.50, $4.50 and $3.50. Student tickets are $3.50, $3.00 and $2.50.

Schneider requests organization list

Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider's office has requested from K-State President Duane Acker a list of all organizations located on the K-State Campus and their functions.

Haymaker board may protest policy predicts the new room construction regulations will cut down the number of students returning to the dorm.

Frith said he isn't happy that the students will have to curtail their room construction. He said he liked the idea that students were able to make the rooms "their" rooms, instead of housing.

Hess said Haymaker's Hall Governing Board (HGB) will ask for a better definition of the new regulations.

"I think HGB ought to ask ARH (Association of Residence Halls) if they'll take on a formal protest of the regulations," he said. "If they don't, HGB ought to do something about it."

Fred Works, ARH president, said ARH wouldn't appeal the regulations.

"ARH can only appeal regulations made by housing, and these regulations come from the fire marshal," Works said.

Nixon aide says news reports false

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—Richard Nixon's closest aide says many news accounts of the former president's life since leaving the White House are "absolute crap."

Retired Marine Lt. Col. Jack Brennan, speaking to a local Republican group, said Wednesday that Nixon's interviews with David Frost, soon to be seen on television, will show "the man that I know—and that all too often was not the case presented by the media."

used in Schneider's investigation of organizations at K-State.

SCHNEIDER'S statement that he would conduct an investigation came after Kansas Farmers Union President Dale Lyon accused K-State of providing facilities for private organizations and the K-State Extension Service of being biased in favor of the beef referendum.

The beef referendum would establish a value-added tax for all cattle sold in the United States. The tax revenue would be used for beef promotion and research.

Daniel Beatty, vice-president for business affairs, sent a letter to all K-State vice-presidents and deans, asking for a list of all organizations that use K-State faculty or staff as officers.

The letter also requests the names of faculty or staff that have been paid by an organization on campus or have provided services such as mailing and correspondence.

The reports from each college are supposed to be submitted by May 3.

LYON said Thursday an investigation of private organizations using K-State facilities was one of the things he wanted.

"They have been subsidized long enough," he said. "Private organizations shouldn't be on the campus. The main thing they make use of is the name Kansas State University, it has an aura of officialness."

Mary Hanfelt, the attorney general's secretary, said Schneider is not investigating private organizations at any other university or college in the state.

Schneider was unavailable for comment.

Monday, Schneider said he was not going to investigate Lyon's charge that the K-State Extension Service is biased on the beef referendum. He said this was a matter of opinion, not law.

Lyon said he does not agree with Schneider, and he will be talking to Schneider and Acker about the matter.

"The university doesn't have any business presenting only one side," Lyon said.

Coeds awed by tennis pros

By BILL STAUFFER
Collegian Reporter

How good are touring tennis professionals? Two Topeka girls had the opportunity to find out when they recently competed in a tennis benefit for the American Cancer Society.

Lisa Beymer, K-State sophomore in business administration and Mary Stauffer, University of Kansas freshman in business administration, competed Monday, April 18, with pros Billy Martin and Vitas Gerulaitis at Topeka's Municipal Auditorium.

The girls received the chance to play the two touring professional tennis players when Stauffer, who teamed with Tracy Spellman of Salina, won the women's doubles at the Wood Valley Racquet Club in Topeka.

Beymer teamed with Becky Buller from Topeka, senior at K-State and they finished second to Stauffer and Spellman. To qualify for the benefit, they had to win the doubles' tournament and also be a Topeka resident. Since Spellman was from Salina, she was automatically disqualified. This allowed either Beymer or Buller to play. Since Buller played in last year's tennis benefit in Topeka, Beymer was chosen to play this year.

"At first I was real scared. I didn't think I would be able to hit the ball back," said Beymer, who has been playing tennis for seven years.

STAUFFER BEGAN playing tennis when she was ten.

Kansas loses both assistant coaches

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP)—The University of Kansas, which finished third in Big Eight basketball this season, lost both of its assistant coaches Thursday.

Duncan Reid, an assistant for the past four seasons, quit to become head basketball coach at Dodge City Community College. Sam Miranda, the top assistant of Coach Ted Owens for 13 years, announced his resignation but gave no reason for the action and did not disclose his future plans.

The KU basketball program came under fire after the Jayhawks lost two games to Missouri and three to Kansas State and failed to make a strong bid for the conference title, and there had been speculation there might be a shakeup. The Jayhawks were 18-10 overall and 8-6 in the conference.

Reid, 37, joined the KU staff four years ago after eight years at Lincoln Ill. High School, where he won 174 and lost 53. At Dodge City, he succeeds Dick Brown, who resigned Feb. 23.

Miranda joined the KU staff before the 1964-65 season, when Owens became head coach. He had been on the University of New Mexico staff two years before that and eight years in the high school ranks at Galatia, Vandalia and Kankakee in Illinois.

Sports

"I was really scared before we started to play but once we started hitting the ball I calmed down," Stauffer said.

"They would ease off when they hit to us. But when they hit to each other they could place the ball anywhere they wanted to. Boy, they were really good," she said.

When asked if she adjusted her game any for the benefit, Beymer said she didn't intentionally change anything but was forced to make adjustments.

"I think I played the net more because the action was there, but my game is really better at the base line," she said.

Stauffer, in noting that neither Martin nor Gerulaitis tried to overpower them, said "they were like human backboards."

"They would just hit the ball back again and again until I made a mistake. They didn't try and hit winners by us, they both let us make most of the mistakes."

IRONICALLY, Stauffer and Beymer were doubles' partners in high school at Topeka West for a year. They took second at the girls' state tennis tournament in 1974.

Each girl differed on whether they would like to be a professional player.

"I don't think I would want to," Beymer said. "I don't have the desire to spend eight hours a day practicing. There is a lot of money but I just don't have the desire."

Beymer is playing number two on the newly formed K-State women's tennis team.

Stauffer said she would like to play for a few years as an amateur or a professional. She is currently playing the number three singles' spot on the women's tennis team at KU.

"I don't think I have the ability to be a pro, but it would be fun. I wouldn't want to make a career of it but a few years would be all right," Stauffer said.

Stauffer said playing as a pro would be a great way to meet people and also to see the country.

Cats face four games with first place OU

K-State Wildcat baseball team open a four-game series today in a doubleheader with the Oklahoma Sooners in Norman.

The Sooners lead the Big Eight conference 6-0 while the Cats are in second place 6-2. K-State has a 23-15 record in the seasonal play.

The Cats have settled into a three man pitching team of Dave Tuttle, Neal Huds and Lon Ostrom. Together they've won six games in the last ten.

Frank Seitz has picked up three wins in his last four appearances out of the bullpen. Seitz has allowed only three baserunners in the last six innings.

In the game against Oklahoma State which gave the Cats their second place stance, K-State committed only three fouls and raised its fielding percentage to .950.

"We're definitely a better pitching and defensive team," said Phil Wilson, head baseball coach.

In the offense, Greg Korbe leads in every category. The rightfielder has the best average of .436, the most runs with 29, 51 hits, 30 RBIs 10 doubles and five home runs.

In Monday's game against Emporia State, the Cats lost both games of the doubleheader.

In the first game, Bob Hoenig got the only hit of the game for K-State as the Cats went down 1-0.

In the second game Emporia overcame K-State 9-4. Both teams scored twice in the first inning and the Cats scored another run in the third.

This weekend's games are scheduled to begin at 1:30 today and 1:00 tomorrow afternoon.

K-State instructor creates 'moving sculpture' from cloth

By DENISE HAYDEN
Collegian Reporter

Marv Graff creates what he calls "moving sculpture."

The K-State instructor of clothing and textiles said he takes the "craftman approach to apparel design" when making his woven creations from natural fibers such as wool and chenille.

About 35 or 40 pieces of Graff's work will be modeled by home economics students at a showing 4 p.m. Sunday in Union Forum Hall.

HE SAID he took his craftsman approach when he realized it was fun to relate crafts to clothing. His designs are "one-of-a-kind," not mass produced.

Each fashion is designed with an off-loom process in which Graff controls the form of the garment through knotting and weaving techniques.

Graff first cuts the desired shapes out of cardboard, which is then warped. He weaves over the cardboard and connects the shapes. When the cardboard is removed the garment is complete. The process takes about 12 hours, Graff said, depending on the style of the garment.

When designing a garment with the craftsman approach, Graff said he must consider the physical and psychological characteristics of the person for whom the garment is being designed. He said he keeps in mind what the garment will relay the wearer is harmony, scale and personality.

The fashions, Graff said, are oriented more toward individuals with strong personalities who are comfortable with unusual styles and color and texture relationships.

GRAFF calls his creations futuristic, yet traditional. He said he prefers natural colors and can usually determine the outcome of a garment when he selects the texture. He usually does some of his designing on a dress form or live model so the garment will be harmonious to the human form. "A garment may take on a completely different feeling when it is on a body," Graff said.

The inspirations for most of his designs come from people, galleries, color and shape, Graff said.

Graff's work has been exhibited in several New York galleries during the past year and a New York specialty shop, Henri Bendel's, will carry a line of Graff's sweaters in the fall. Several other New York specialty shops will also carry his fashions.

Teenagers illegally print phony IDs

DAVIE, Fla. (AP)—Two high school pupils did extra work during their printing-shop classes, but police said they weren't after good marks.

Officers said Thursday that the students used school equipment to print at least 200 phony drivers' licenses to sell to fellow students.

The licenses—with teenagers' real names and pictures but phony addresses and increased ages—were sold for $5 to $40, said Ron Pagano, a spokesman for the police department of nearby Hollywood, Fla. They were used primarily as proof of age for entry into bars.

Business courses helpful for women

Women in the work force was the topic of an informal discussion last night in the Union, in the last talk of a four-day women's awareness program sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

"If she wants to get ahead, a woman has to work harder and expend more energy than a man," said Jan Kruh, leader of the discussion.

To make a woman "more employable," a study of 42 companies suggests taking courses through summer jobs, starting in a small company and being flexible in choosing a job location, Kruh said.

There are jobs available in almost every field, if a woman is willing to relocate, she said.

Lone gunman robs Mini Mart of $62

A lone gunman robbed Mini Mart at 831 Poyntz of $62 about 11 p.m. Wednesday, Riley County police said.

The only clerk in the store during the incident, Chuck Schimpf, K-State junior in finance, was unharmed. The police have not apprehended the gunman. Police describe the man as stocky, six-feet tall, and wearing a white T-shirt, dark pants and army combat boots.

The gunman fled in a 1968 or 1969 dark green Dodge Charger, police said.

Schimpf said he had just walked in from outside after "getting some fresh air," when the gunman confronted him with an automatic pistol. He said the gunman instructed him to empty all money out of his pockets and the cash register. Schimpf said the gunman "was more nervous than me."

Public forum slated to center on women's rights and status

The status of women and issues surrounding them are topics of a public "speak out" Saturday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Manhattan Public Library Auditorium sponsored by the National Commission on the Observance of International Women's Year.

"The emphasis is on the people attending," said Jan Lyons, regional coordinator for the commission. "The purpose is to sample and get the ideas and concerns of women."

Small group discussions focusing on individual participation have been decided upon to attract women who wouldn't ordinarily attend, Lyons said.

Discussion topics include: employment, legal rights, being a parent, child abuse, handling money and the status of the homemaker.

Conclusions drawn from the meeting will be sent to the state meeting July 15 to July 17 in Wichita. After the national meeting in November, a report will be made to President Carter and Congress.

Ideas concerning Kansas women will be followed up here by appropriate agencies, Lyons said.

Terrorists given life imprisonment

STUTTGART, West Germany (AP)—Urban guerrilla Andreas Baader and two companions were sentenced to life imprisonment Thursday for the terror-bomb murders of four United States soldiers during the Vietnam war.

Baader, 33, his girl friend Gudrun Ensslin, 36, and Jan Carl Raspe, 32, were found guilty of bombing Army posts in Frankfurt and Heidelberg in 1972 and buildings in four other German cities.

"Not everyone can declare himself a subject of international law and declare war on his own," Judge Eberhard Foth declared in rejecting defense claims that the bombings were legitimate protests against United States military actions in Vietnam.

The three terrorists were also convicted by the five-judge tribunal of 34 counts of attempted murder and of forming a criminal conspiracy. They are on a hunger strike in their jail cells and refused to come to court to hear the verdict.

Solitary bunny roams in Ackert greenhouse

By SUSAN SPENCER
Collegian Reporter

The top floor of Ackert Hall houses a biology greenhouse, a mycology (fungi) lab and a rabbit.

The rabbit, the greenhouse mascot, was an Easter gift to Lisa Short, resident of Moore Hall.

WHEN SHORT could not take Rabbit home over the summer, a friend Rob Apsley offered to keep him. Apsley is a full-time greenhouse employee.

"He was so noisy in the Hall, that Rob thought he could keep him in the greenhouse instead of his apartment," Short said.

"Rob fell in love with Rabbit and I could see he was at home in the greenhouse, so I gave him up," she said.

"Bito," a short form of "Rabbit," is what Apsley has chosen to call Rabbit.

"He has learned some new tricks in the greenhouse," Apsley said. "Whenever someone comes in, he runs toward the person and does figure-8's around their feet."

Apsley first kept Rabbit in the greenhouse, but it got too hot since the greenhouse is on the roof. Apsley then moved him to the inside room, where his favorite spot is in one of the lab carts.

"He must be kind of bored because he always tries to get in the greenhouse area. That is a different game with him. He won't let you catch him then," Apsley said.

"Once when Rabbit was loose on the floor, he got locked inside one of the professor's offices. I shoved wheat straw under the door so he would have something to eat," he said.

Ahearn ruins Doobies

Vic Winter

By KAY COLES
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Another nationally-known rock band fell victim to K-State's acoustically poor monstrosity Saturday night—Ahearn Field House.

The Doobie Brothers, perhaps one of the top groups to ever perform at K-State, gave an electrifying concert which was unfortunately marred by the reverberations in the inadequate structure.

The group is reputed to give clean, crisp and musically pleasing concerts, but while performing in Ahearn each note echoed endlessly and the vocals were fused into seemingly mindless jabber.

Foreigner warmed up the audience with its English-style hard rock and did not have the acoustic problems which plagued the Doobie Brothers.

Foreigner performed "Cold as Ice," "The Damage is Done" and "Starrider," all from its first album. Foreigner's sound was crisp and vocals understandable.

The closing number, "Feels Like the First Time," is the band's hit single and demonstrated the professional caliber of the group. Lou Gramm, lead vocalist, constantly strutted around the stage with his curly hair flying behind him.

MICK JONES, co-founder of Foreigner, demonstrated his obvious control over the group and fondled his guitar with true affection.

Ian McDonald, the group's other founder, showed tremendous musical versatility playing guitar, keyboards and performing some of the vocals.

The Doobie Brothers opened its set with "China Grove" to a standing, screaming audience. Patrick Simmons and Tiran Porter performed vocals and seemed enthralled with the music they were creating.

Mike McDonald's keyboard performance showed his musical talent to be a good addition to the group. He also sang several of the mellower tunes.

Simmons, his long hair flowing around him, seemed to almost touch the floor as he arched his back over his guitar and coaxed music from it.

John Hartman, one of the original members of the group, sat on a stool with headphones on and appeared lost in the music and oblivious to the audience. He did, however, rise and pace around the stage during a few numbers, still emersed in the music.

FOG, FIREWORKS and a torch used to strike a gong were some of the special effects used by the group.

The vibrations of the bass were so resounding it seemed as though Ahearn was going to tumble down on the audience.

Closing with "Jesus is Just Alright," the Doobie Brothers had the crowd roaring its approval as the group performed an extended version of the number.

Still roaring, the audience demanded an encore and the group seemed to enjoy being called on to continue.

A tribute to the first-class concert came in the end when flowers were tossed onto the stage.

The only unfortunate aspect of the concert was the poor acoustics. The crowd was barraged with noise and hearing a clear separation of the instruments and vocals was nearly impossible.

The Doobie Brothers, with its tons of equipment, produced a good deal of fine sound which, in the end, was hard to hear.

Judging by the crowd's reactions, however, the final concert of this school year was a success. While the future of the K-State concert situation looks promising, the only drawback seems to be an acoustically pleasing facility.

Reborn: More than 500 county folks share Charismatic-Pentecostal faiths

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a four-part series on the charismatic-pentecostal movement in the midwestern United States.

By BECCY TANNER
Staff Writer

The graffiti on the restroom wall read, "Jesus Christ has money in the Chase Manhattan Bank. Jesus Christ saves."

Cynics may smile, but others equate Christ with their soul's salvation.

Within the past several years increasing numbers of people, worldwide, have become members of the Charismatic-Pentecostal movement. Public attention has been drawn not only to a "born-again, tongue-talkin', spirit-filled" President of the United States but also to "the common people" holding prayer meetings before and after work.

SOME 120 people were interviewed in four communities: Stafford, Riley and Shawnee Counties in Kansas, and East Moline, Ill., and others scattered in Oklahoma, Nebraska, Colorado, Missouri, and Arizona.

They work in professional occupations such as engineering, medicine, teaching, farming and ministry. Residents of small communities usually wished not to be identified, partly for fear of being labeled as "that woman down the street who speaks in tongues."

Pentecostalism derives its name from Pentecost, the Jewish Harvest Festival that comes 50 days after Passover. Charismatics believe signs (establishment of the nation of Israel, increase in ability to speak in tongues, healings, prophecy) denote the earth to be in its "latter days."

Charismatic comes from the Greek, "Charismata," meaning "gifts of grace." It refers to members of established church denominations who have received the "baptism of the Holy Spirit." Believers claim spiritual encounters through the Holy Spirit, including God-given gifts of speaking in tongues, prophecy and healings.

More than 500 Riley County residents attend Charismatic-

Pentecostal meetings regularly. They say either they have been "chosen," or they reached a low point in life and needed Divine help.

RITA SCHAFFER of Topeka, regional director of a woman's interdenominational prayer organization called Aglow, believes she was "chosen."

"Before I came to know Christ, I often had spiritual encounters," Schaffer said. "The best way I can describe it was that they were like whirlwinds. As a child out playing, I would suddenly feel this presence come upon me."

"It was a good feeling and I loved it. I know I couldn't name it—but would draw in my elbows and sit there. I liked it," she said.

When Schaffer was 12 years old she again felt this "Presence" in a Methodist church and she had her first vision.

"I didn't really know what was going on," she said. "I was going to be baptized. I stood up, and instead of seeing the front of the church, I saw two great wooden doors ornately carved."

Schaffer said these doors had two knobs that she couldn't resist opening.

"I stepped through, and there before me was the Great Throne of God, clothed in a white mist. There were three gorgeous people."

SCHAFFER SAID the person on the right, which she said was (see CHARISMATICS, page 10)

Tests confirm food poisoning as cause of sorority illness

Flu-like symptoms of 26 people who attended a Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority party have been identified as food poisoning, a state health department official said Friday.

The people became ill after a dinner April 16 at the Downtown Ramada Inn in Topeka. The cause of illness was Salmonella infantus, state Secretary of Health and Environment Dwight Metzler was reported as saying in Saturday's Topeka Daily Capital.

Metzler said four Ramada Inn cooks have been identified as carriers of the organism, a form of food poisoning. The cooks have been removed from their jobs.

According to Metzler, the incident could be the second case of food poisoning at the Ramada Inn. Several representatives of an independent telephone company became ill following a dinner April 7, he said.

OUT OF 26 showing symptoms of food poisoning, the Salmonella organism has been isolated from six individuals, said Donald Wilcox, director of the state Bureau of Epidemiology.

"We've had seven people who were in the hospital and a few others who were also sick," Kappa Kappa Gamma President Tracey Smith said.

Some of the sorority women went to Manhattan hospitals or hometown doctors, Smith said. At least one of the women was treated specifically for food poisoning.

Doobie Brothers try to make band concert into symphony

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

Pat Simmons, Doobie Brothers lead guitarist, wearily sat down, tossed his waist-length silky hair back and gulped hard on a cold beer.

Simmons and the other eight band members had just finished playing before a Ahearn Field House audience Saturday night. He described the band's philosophy toward its music.

"It's like we try to make a concert like a symphony," Simmons said. "We try to think of the entire concert as one complete statement."

SIMMONS paused momentarily to discuss with a fellow band member the fieldhouse acoustics. Band members agreed the fieldhouse echoed too much.

He said the band tries to pull the audience through a concert by bringing it to a peak then leveling off gradually.

"We don't like to just blow people away," he said. "You try to bring the crowd to a peak, then slowly bring them down, then back up."

Simmons had been talking for several minutes in an easygoing manner, but stopped short for a moment and sighed heavily. The band has been on tour for three weeks, performing six nights a week. The tour has three weeks to go and the band is scheduled to play in Wichita tonight.

Simmons said "it's pretty rough" for the band to endure the mental and physical strain of a tour. And sometimes, audience reaction isn't what they hope for, he said. But he attributes that to the mood of an audience before a concert.

"Sometimes you hit a weekend, and the crowd is out of it from partying," he said.

IN THAT event, he said, the band becomes innovative, performing impromptu songs such as "The Star Spangled Banner" to get the audience's attention. They also play different styles in each concert, experimenting with new sound effects and rhythms.

"We try to take people through a musical trip," he said.

Simmons said audiences are rarely unruly, mainly because of fewer persons using drugs. In the seven years the Doobie Brothers has been touring, he said audiences have become progressively more sophisticated.

Simmons said he and the other band members stood out in Manhattan more so than in other cities. He said when he was walking through downtown Manhattan the afternoon before the concert, motorists would point and say, "There's the Doobie Brothers."

Chinese officials celebrated May Day with garden parties in Peking but there were bloody clashes in other countries, including a gun battle that left 33 dead in Turkey.

In Moscow's Red Square, Politburo members turned out for a two-hour parade of floats, flowers and banners under brilliant sunshine. No armaments or military hardware were displayed.

China's Hsinhua news agency said government leaders joined the masses in garden parties, creating "a joyous atmosphere of unity" for the Marxists' traditional day of the worker.

In Rome, Pope Paul VI called on the faithful to pray for the world's unemployed, telling a crowd of 10,000 he hoped May Day would not become "a means for the conquest of temporal economic welfare a means of social progress."

There was violence in Turkey, Greece, France, Spain, San Salvador and elsewhere.

Turkish Premier Suleyman Demirel called an emergency cabinet meeting to discuss measures to curb the violence that has become a major issue in next month's national elections.

HAYS—Congress will tackle the wheat cash flow crisis as a bipartisan issue, says Rep. Keith Sebelius, (R-Kan.)

Sebelius, speaking at a governmental affairs forum here Saturday night, said both the White House and Capitol Hill are feeling the pressure of farm groups lobbying against "an agri-tragedy in wheat."

The 1st District Republican cited a policy reversal by President Carter that would permit target prices of $2.90 per bushel for wheat in 1987. Carter had originally set a ceiling of $2.65 per bushel.

But the change will do little to help the 1977 wheat crop, which is about to be harvested, Sebelius pointed out, calling it "a sad commentary that a ton of alfalfa costs more in some places than a ton of wheat."

Long- and short-range programs with optional government involvement are needed to solve the dilemma, he said.

KANSAS CITY—The legal and scientific status of Laetrile, the alleged anti-cancer drug, will be the subject this week at a court-ordered public hearing to be held by the Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA already has more than 5,000 pieces of written testimony and rebuttal on file in a stack two feet in height. And 20 persons, for and against the use of Laetrile, have filed their intention of presenting oral arguments.

The FDA had intended to hold a one-day hearing today, but the outpouring of interest has forced at least a second day to accommodate all those who wish to speak, a spokesman said.

Laetrile, also known as amygdalin and vitamin B-17, occurs naturally in the pits of apricots, peaches and bitter almonds. It has been promoted as a cancer "cure" for about 25 years and the FDA says that recently promoters are claiming it can also prevent cancer.

WASHINGTON—Detectable levels of three pesticide compounds were found in the milk of a majority of nursing mothers tested by the Environmental Protection Agency. But health experts say the low levels pose no immediate health hazard to either mothers or their newborn children.

"However, the possible long term consequences of these minute amounts are uncertain," the EPA said in a statement accompanying the study released Sunday.

All of the six pesticides involved in the test have been curbed to some extent, "primarily because they are suspected to be human cancer agents," EPA said.

Might is inferior to rights

The International Institute for Strategic Studies, a respected independent center for world-wide research on security, defense and arms control criticized Friday the Carter administration for disarmament policies which "smacked of obsolete concepts."

THE GROUP, composed of statesmen and scholars from more than 60 Western nations, analyzed the position of America in comparison to Soviet Russia. They said the reason the Soviet Union emphasized military might is because they have no other means to spread their influence in the world.

"Economically uncompetitive, culturally repressive, and ideologically increasingly barren, her (Russia's) primary claim to global power and influence is military might."

AFTER SO describing the failings of the Soviets the group criticized Carter's statements on human rights as destructive of the cordiality and trust previous administrations had developed in East-West relations.

And then incredibly, the group suggested the U.S. balance the arms build-up of the Soviets by increasing its own military power.

If the Russian's claim to global power rests solely on military power and not on the appeal of her ideology why then should America compromise its position?

ADVANCEMENT OF human rights for all mankind is central to the American ideal. It is far better to gather respect as a country that encourages cultural diversity and holds firm the ideals of democracy than to rest solely on your influence as a potential enemy of awesome might.

Rather than criticize Carter, the Institute should applaud his courage and point to America as a country which, unlike the Russians, can proudly point to her beliefs and defend them against all.

Term papers can be as damaging to a college student's academic life as VD is to his social life. Therefore, it is critical for a student to develop a system to make term papers pass as quickly and painlessly as possible.

Timing is critical in writing term papers. A student should always write the paper on the day before it is due. If he tries to write it one day sooner, he will lack the proper incentive. If he writes it one day later, he will not receive the proper reward.

The first thing a student must do is select a topic. This should be done with extreme care. If a student has term papers assigned in several classes, he should select one topic which will satisfy requirements for all the courses.

THIS IS sometimes difficult. For instance, a student may have term papers assigned in archaeology, physical education and philosophy. However, where there's a will, there's a way. In this case, the student's topic might be "The Philosophy of Exercise Among Early American Indians."

After the student has selected a topic, he should go to the library and check out every book and magazine related to the topic. There is sometimes a tendency to panic when the student ends up with 15 or 20 books, but he really has nothing to fear. After all, he isn't planning to read the books, but merely to create an impressive bibliography.

NEXT, THE student must get rid of his roommate. The most friendly way of doing this is to set him up with a hot date. That way the roommate won't return until the wee hours of the morning. However, it is probably just as effective to chase the roommate out the door with a loaded shotgun.

Now the student is alone with his task. It is going to be a long night, so it is necessary to dress properly for the occasion—in a T-shirt and gym shorts.

Freshmen tend to get a little nervous about working on college term papers, so they might consider starting out with a good stiff drink to settle their nerves.

The biggest danger with seniors is falling asleep before their papers are completed. Male seniors should start out by taping Farrah Fawcett posters above their typewriters. (If that doesn't keep them awake, nothing will.) Females can do the same thing with Robert Redford posters or posters advertising the movie Rocky.

THE NEXT thing the student should do is surround his desk with books. It doesn't really matter if the books pertain to the term paper topic. They are mainly just for atmosphere, anyway. Getting in the proper mood is so important.

The student is now ready to start typing. Only rookies take the time to write their papers out long hand before they begin typing. Professionals don't waste time with such trivial details.

The writer should type as much as possible off the top of his head. He should only take time to look up quotes from books when he runs out of things to say. Whenever he is forced to pick up a book, he should curse himself vigorously for not being more creative.

TEACHERS SEEM to be favorably impressed if the student sprinkles his paper with little numbers at the ends of sentences. Presumably, the teachers are impressed because numbers are the last keys students learn to type in typing school.

An English teacher once explained that the numbers were supposed to be followed with sources on the bottom of the pages. This doesn't make much sense in my case, however, as teachers always seem to need that space to make nasty comments on my writing ability. A student should use his own judgment in the matter.

When a student has finished writing the minimum number of pages, he should stop. There is no use extending the torture. Most teachers consider it rude not to finish the last sentence however

Letters to the editor

Beach a mess

Editor,

The other day as the temperature reached the upper 80s, like many other K-State students I made my annual trek to the beach area of Tuttle Creek, Tuttle Puddle. I looked forward to a relaxing commune with nature as I caught some rays. To my disgust the beach was already littered with cans, bottles, cups and empty sacks. As I began to clean it up I realized how easy it is to pick up a mess. It only becomes a job when you are picking up after more than just yourself. If each person would become responsible for his own trash then the beach would again become a scenic spot to tan, swim and picnic. But after all, who wants to get a tan at the city dump!

Why not rent?

Editor,

The column by Randy Ellis in last Monday's Collegian was one of the best I have read. It expresses my sentiments exactly. Why is it that while candidates for Masters and Doctorate degrees may rent their cap and gown while us "poor souls" who are getting a Bachelors degree have to buy our cap and gown for which most of us have no use for after graduation? Why is it that at other major universities the cap and gown may be rented? I strongly feel that our administrators need to do some investigation into the feelings of the students and possibly change this impish rule that has been set forth by Faculty Senate.

Guidance center application to provide needed services

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

After months of controversy, the North Central Kansas Guidance Center Board submitted Friday a federal grant application for partial funding of a comprehensive mental health center plan affecting a 10-county region including Riley County.

The Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) Department sponsored plan would provide additional mental health services to the region. It's projected there would be twice the number of patients, who would be charged according to ability to pay.

ALLEN DAVIS, executive director of the guidance center located in Manhattan, said the plan would provide some "urgently" needed services. He said the center's child counseling program is overbooked with cases and a 24-hour psychiatric emergency service is needed.

The $716,714 application will be reviewed by state and federal mental health agencies, and HEW's decision is expected to be made by August. If HEW approves the application, the plan would be implemented in January 1978.

The guidance center, which provides mental health services to Riley, Pottawatomie, Marshall, Geary and Clay counties, submitted the application in conjunction with the Sunflower Mental Health Center, which is based in Concordia and provides mental health services for Cloud, Jewell, Mitchell, Republic and Washington counties.

"The biggest thing it would do would be to bring the comprehensive services to the residents in the five-county area," said Mike Taylor, administrative director of the Sunflower Center.

Fees to be paid by AIB students

Students at the American Institute of Baking (AIB) in Manhattan next year will be required to pay fees for the use of such K-State student services as the Union, Lafene Student Health Center, lower-priced tickets and Recreational Services.

The exchange, approved by the Kansas Board of Regents at its last meeting, stipulates the AIB students will pay the same fees as K-State students, except for tuition, according to Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs.

The AIB students will begin classes in January for 20-week periods, said William Hoover, AIB head.

The institute is trying to get some of its courses approved for credit at K-State so K-State students may take them during intersession, Hoover said.

ONE REQUIREMENT to be met by the counties under the plan is to provide 12 mental health services.

The guidance center now provides six of those services: adult out-patient (non-hospitalization); children's out-patient; alcoholism; consultation and education; limited screening of court referrals to state mental institutions and some aftercare services to patients having been hospitalized.

The Sunflower Center provides only out-patient, consultation and education, and public agency assistance services.

New services provided by the plan would be: 24-hour emergency service; elderly aid; drug counseling; partial hospitalization for psychiatric patients; sheltered community living and in-patient psychiatric services.

Funding for new services under the plan would come from federal, state and county government sources, with the federal government subsidizing about one-half the plan's $1,479,821 budget the first operational year and in decreasing amounts over an eight-year period. During that time, a non-profit umbrella agency, the Pawnee Center, would be established to dispense federal funds to the two mental health centers.

Both mental health centers are now funded through county tax levies. Those levy amounts couldn't decrease under the plan.

CONTROVERSY about the plan, confined mainly to officials in Riley County, has centered on the nature of Public Law 94-63, which regulated the plan.

"Public Law 94-63 isn't liked by some because it requires all 12 services," Davis said. "Then, naturally, if you accept money from another source there are regulations to be met, and the regulations are rigorous."

The former president of the Riley County Mental Health Association (RCMHA), Phyllis Shanline, said the plan is too large for the 10 counties.

"I don't see a proper amount of staff to do the job it's designed to do," Shanline said. "I can't say I'm against the services provided under this law, but I prefer a steady increase in providing the services rather than trying to provide so many at one time."

Hal Shaver, RCMHA president, said some people are worried that the plan would cost too much to operate.

Staff size at both centers is expected to double under the plan.

Shaver said he favors the plan, but added the RCMHA decided to issue no opinion because of a division among members concerning the plan.

SHANLINE SAID she wants stronger support from the Manhattan community before the plan is implemented.

She said the plan would be more effective if fewer counties were involved, and if stronger support came from mental health professionals.

Davis said the decision to apply for the grant with the Sunflower Center was based largely on the unwillingness on the part of Manhattan hospital administrators and psychiatrists to provide an in-patient psychiatric center in Riley County. Concordia would be the site of an in-patient center, he said.

Shanline said there's too much competition for hospital beds at the two Manhattan hospitals—St. Mary and Memorial—and it is unfair to ask them to reserve beds for psychiatric patients when overcrowding creates demand by other illnesses.

Dan Broyles, St. Mary hospital administrator, said there isn't a need for an in-patient facility in Manhattan.

Broyles said he questions whether the two centers need to have a comprehensive plan. He said the plan would duplicate some services, such as in-patient psychiatric care.

On the job every day

ABOVE: The counted and sacked nuts and bolts are put into burlap bags for shipment. LEFT: Larry is encouraged to work by himself to complete a job.

CLAY CENTER—Most people wouldn't expect Larry Bohnenblust to work. But he is ambitious and on the job every day.

He wants people to see his wheelchair as a tool and nothing more.

"In my case people have to recognize my situation, I have to have my equipment to use to the best of my ability," Larry said. "I have to have my wheelchair."

HE WANTS people to look past his wheelchair and the crippling neurological disease which forces him to depend upon it. He wants people to see he's just like everyone else and he's worked hard to prove it.

"I had to start from scratch to work up to where I am now," he said. "I had to go through the rough and the hard way to get to where I am now."

"Where" is the Big Lakes Developmental Center, Inc. workshop in Clay Center where Larry, 21, has worked since January.

His work at Clay Center includes sorting, counting and sacking nuts and bolts, operating a power saw, refinishing furniture and sorting clothing patterns.

A BLDC van with a special wheelchair lift transports Larry between the workshop and a farm outside Riley where he lives with his parents, two brothers and a sister.

LARRY realizes he's developmentally disabled but he's determined to overcome it, said Lillian Bosch, a rehabilitation foreman at the workshop.

"He's really got determination and that's what anybody as handicapped as Larry needs to succeed in this world," Bosch said.

"His attitude and philosophy are 'I can' and Larry does," said Marcena Kitchener, supervisor of the workshop. "He has an extremely healthy self-image for his handicapped condition."

"I don't think he thinks of himself as a handicapped person," she said.

AS WITH the other 15 worker-clients at the workshop, Larry's ultimate goal is to find a job outside.

"The people here are good people," he said. "I'm sure they'll do what they can to find you (clients) a job."

He is quick to mention the purpose of the workshop and of BLDC is to help developmentally disabled persons live as normally as possible within their community. This includes helping clients develop good work habits and marketable skills.

Although staff members speak enthusiastically about the small victories their clients fight to gain, they are realistic about the clients' chances for getting an outside job.

MOST clients will never be able to leave the workshop and find outside employment. Those who eventually leave will have trouble securing a job, Kitchener said.

"I think that many of our people will not be able to go into the outside world and be competitive as employees," Bosch said.

"A lot of people are afraid of them," she said. "There are a lot of misconceptions."

Ironically, some employers won't hire a developmentally disabled person because they believe employees' morale would suffer if workers saw a developmentally disabled person doing the same type of work as they were, she said.

"Most of the jobs on a factory line today could be done by people in our workshop," Bosch said.

DEVELOPMENTALLY disabled persons may eventually secure outside jobs on a sheltered employment basis.

With sheltered employment, worker-clients would work on a contracted job in a factory under workshop staff supervision.

"That's the way our people are going to get into industry if they ever do," Bosch said.

While Larry's condition would prevent him from performing some tasks, he could do practically anything if equipment was modified so he could use it, she said.

"I would never want to think this (workshop) was the end all, because he can go farther than this," she said.

In addition to his regular job, Larry serves on two area councils which give clients a voice in the programs designed to serve them.

"So, I've got two jobs besides this one," Larry said proudly. "And the regional council sent in my name to be on the state council."

"I figure I might as well do my part to help out the people like myself," Larry said. "It's the least I can do for them."

FOR LARRY, being handicapped forces him to work harder to achieve the same ends others gain with little effort. He realizes others must work even harder than he does for less. Instinctively, he wants to help them.

"There are people that are in a worse situation than I'm in," he said. "They probably won't be able to get an outside job. People like them will have to stay here."

The thought of staying at the workshop doesn't bother Larry, but his goal is to secure an outside job.

He doesn't expect to have one soon, but he views it as something that will happen eventually.

"It's just a question of time," he said.

Wildcats split series with OU

By TERRY REILLY
Collegian Reporter

Two homeruns and two singles by left-fielder Jeff Moore highlighted K-State's play Saturday, after the Cats managed to split a pair with Oklahoma after losing two games Friday afternoon.

The opening two games resulted in 5-0 and 4-2 losses for the Cats, thus clinching the Western Division title for the Sooners.

Phil Wilson, K-State head baseball coach, attributed

Sports

Friday's losses to an earlier season problem of playing too tight.

"We weren't relaxed early and we didn't win," Wilson said. The Cats made three mistakes in the first inning of the opening game, giving up three unearned runs.

"We didn't go out and play aggressively and they took the game from us," he said.

Wilson mentioned the possibility that intimidation might have had a role in the Cats' losses, as the Sooner record stood at 26-8 before the K-State series.

THIRD BASEMAN Bill Youngblood recalled the Sooner squad of last year, saying this year's squad wasn't as good.

Admitting that K-State did not play well in the series, Youngblood said the Sooners were definitely beatable as the Cats proved in Saturday's first game.

Youngblood blamed the losses more on hitting than on defense, as the Cats' committed seven errors in Friday's games.

"We didn't get that many key hits," Youngblood said, but he felt intimidation had no part in the losses.

Youngblood said the 30,000 fans that turned out for the OU football scrimmage Saturday was noticeable, as the baseball field is located adjacent to the football field.

"A lot of people showed up at our game after the scrimmage was over," he said.

Both K-State and Oklahoma have qualified for the post-season tournament May 18-21 in Oklahoma City.

The Wildcats, now 24-18 on the season, will meet Eastern Division champs, Missouri, in the first round of the tournament.

Women win one event as men lose at Drake

K-State's women's 880 medley relay team salvaged a win for the Wildcats in the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, Saturday.

The team of Pat Osborn, Sharon McKee, Jan Smith and Cindy Worcester set a school record in the winning time of 1:45.4.

Saturday's meet was the first time since 1967 the men tracksters failed to win a first place spot in the Midwest Relays Circuit.

The men's team's highest finish was sixth place when the sprint medley foursome of Darnell Washington, Vince Parrette, Chris Muehlbach and Bob Prince timed in at 3:23.4.

In the 480-yard shuttle hurdle relay, the men won their heat in 1:01.9, but the time wasn't fast enough to qualify them for the finals which took four teams.

The women took three third places and one fourth place finish in addition to their lone first place stance.

Renee Urish set a school record in the 1,500-meter run. He 4:19.33 time was one of the third places K-State racked up. Linda Long took another third place with a 45-1 shot put distance. The mile relay team clocked in 3:55.4 for the other third place.

Worcester timed in 2:08.9 in the 800 meter run for K-State's fourth place finish.

K-State's Bob Prince ran the fastest Big Eight time ever recorded in the 800-meters Friday but finished fifth. Prince finished in 1:47.11.

Randy Wilson, Oklahoma's premier miler, won the event in 1:46.6. In the process he defeated superstars Mike Boti and Rick Wolhuter.

The Wildcats got their highset placing of the day on Friday from Frank Perbeck. He tossed the javeling 228-5 for fourth place.

Poquette sparks K.C. past Toronto

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Tom Poquette doubled and singled and turned in two sparkling defensive plays to help boost the Kansas City Royals past the Toronto Blue Jays 8-2 Sunday.

The Royals pushed across three runs in the first inning and five more in the eighth.

Dave Lemanczyk, 2-2, walked Poquette in the first. Poquette went to third on John Mayberry's single and scored on a wild pitch. After Darrell Porter walked, Amos Otis scored Mayberry with a single, then Al Cowens' bloop single sent Porter home.

Lemanczyk held the Royals scoreless until the eighth. But Porter reached on a fielder's choice, went to second on Bob Bailor's bobble of Amos Otis' grounder and came home on Cowens' double. Fred Patek followed with a double against the left-field fence to clear the bases.

Men's novice four wins in Madison

K-State's crew's novice men's four won first place in the Midwestern Regional Sprints Saturday in Madison, Wis.

The novice men's four completed the 1,852 meter course in 6:54.8. Wichita State was second in 6:48.8.

The varsity men's four took second in 6:45.4. The men's novice eight was fifth in 6:30.9. The women's lightweight eight was third in 7:05.6. Women's varsity eight finished sixth in their race in 6:59.6. The men's varsity eight won the consolation race in 5:55.0. Jerry Arnold was third in the open singles in 7:27.3.

Math department to discuss future procedures on tenure

K-State's mathematics department last week unanimously adopted a resolution asking Arts and Sciences Dean William Stamey to meet Tuesday with arts and sciences faculty members to discuss possible future tenure appointment procedures.

The mathematics department is opposed to a decision made last fall by Stamey stating all tenure appointments be made on the basis of written evaluations from tenured faculty in each department.

Robert Williams, professor of mathematics, said the department should have two or three tenure appointment options, not just the one Stamey decided on.

CURRENTLY, tenured faculty in the mathematics department make tenure appointments by secret ballot.

The mathematics department resolution also calls for the formation of a committee to recommend to Stamey tenure procedures "that would be uniform, equitable and protective of the rights of both candidates and the faculty."

The written statement from faculty members gives candidates the benefit of the department head's opinion.

K-Staters 'Run for CARE'

K-State's Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity won the "Run for CARE" Saturday, finishing the 37.7 mile course between Manhattan and Lawrence in three hours 57 minutes and 12 seconds.

Alpha Phi Alpha, the challenging fraternity from the University of Kansas, finished seven minutes and 37 seconds later, said Cornell Hill, Kappa Alpha Psi member.

Kappa Alpha Psi collected more than $40 in the charity event to aid poverty stricken countries in Africa.

"For every dollar that we raised, CARE will give a certain amount. Last year they gave $4.6 for each dollar," Hill said.

Rain greeted runners at the start of the race, but stopped with 16 miles to go Hill said.

"We felt real good about the run. Everybody did their best," he said.

The run sponsored by Schlitz, which supplied both teams with shirts and jackets and 17,000 cans of beer for the disco-dance Saturday night in Lawrence.

Chicano identity fades

Language link to culture, past

By ANTHONY SEALS

Collegian Reporter

Chicanos are being separated from their language, according to Sabine Ulibarri, chairman of the modern and classical languages department at the University of New Mexico.

Ulibarri, who is also an author, spoke Friday on "Language and Culture" in the Union as part of the Latino Awareness Series sponsored by MEChA, a Chicano student organization.

"Language is people and people are language. The two are indivisible," Ulibarri said. "A wedge has been driven between the Hispano and his language, leaving the Hispano floundering in confusion."

HE SAID a dynamic "anglo-culture" is coming between himself and his past, and as his language fades his identity with a culture and history also fades.

Our greatest natural resource is human differences, not similarities, Ulibarri said.

"It is one thing to homogenize milk and mass produce refrigerators. It is quite another thing to try and homogenize a citizenry."

"Every attempt must be made to save the Spanish and Indian languages," he said, which can be done by well-trained bilingual teachers.

Ulibarri said language is a "living current that joins an individual to his past" and is a "novel" of people's laughter and tears, triumph and failures and aspirations and disappointments.

UNTIL a new language is formed for the Hispano, he will remain somewhat disoriented to Hispanic culture and history, Ulibarri said.

"This process took hundreds of years to forge and cannot be replaced in one generation," he said.

When Spanish is translated into English, much of the meaning is lost, Ulibarri said.

"Each language has its own internal logic, it's own hidden activation that is impossible to transfer to another language," he said.

State funds to help energy programs

By DAVE KAUP
Collegian Reporter

Energy conservation programs for K-State are part of a $370 million allocation to state universities approved by the Kansas legislature Friday.

K-State will receive $195,000 as part of a $1.9 million statewide regent's systems energy conservation program. The bill awaits final approval by Gov. Robert Bennett.

Bennett has item veto power over the allocations bill, but Rep. Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, believes Bennett will not make many item vetoes in the bill.

"We are under his (Bennett's) requested budget by a little bit and he would be hard pressed to justify any cuts," he said.

THE MONEY will be used by K-State to insulate attics of 14 of the campus' older buildings, install a heat recycling unit in the Veterinary Medicine Research Building and install an air conditioning unit in Ackert Hall. The savings to the University from this program has not been estimated.

"The money will be available on the first of July," said Paul Young, vice president for university development. The projects will take more than a year to complete, he said.

One million dollars of the $1.9 million allocated for energy conservation will be placed in a fund to be distributed to all state universities by the Board of Regents for projects not mentioned in the bill, Weaver said.

K-State could receive $339,000 of this money to replace wooden-framed, single-paned windows on four campus buildings with metal-framed, double-paned windows, Young said. He estimated that the windows would pay for themselves in reduced energy costs in 15 years and save the University $15,000 a year in 1976 dollars.

ONE PROGRAM requested by all of state universities was power management systems which would monitor the energy consumption in campus buildings and shut down heating and air conditioning units during certain times to conserve electricity. The power management systems would be centrally controlled by a computer on each campus.

The system would save K-State $150,000 a year in energy, Young said.

The legislature struck this program from the final bill, but federal monies might be available for power management systems, Weaver said.

Charismatics say appearance of visions, dreams sign of faith

Jesus, stepped down off the throne to a platform.

"He just stood there, with His hands out to me. I fell in love with Him. I couldn't resist the beauty and the love."

Schafer said that at 19 she met the Holy Spirit and had another vision.

"I was so thrilled," she said. "I saw the same vision as before—The Great Throne of God. This time the person on the left came to greet me. He said, 'Now you know Me.'"

In a third vision, during her college years, Schafer said she glimpsed God, the Father.

"One night the Lord showed me how valuable prayer was. I would put my prayers on a little escalator, and they would run up to Jesus. He would take them in His own hands, and hand them to the Father. Then He (God) would hold those like they were the most precious things. Oh praise God. I knew I wanted Him to make all my decisions."

Charismatics say miracles, visions and dreams are a sign of the faithful—only appearing to "chosen ones."

But they often caution one another not to make non-charismatics feel like second-class Christians.

CARL BANGS, professor of historical theology at St. Paul's School of Theology, Kansas City, Mo., claims that charismatic people are overly emotional and insecure, and thinks the movement is a fad.

Bangs said the charismatics he knows are well-off financially.

"How can they profess to be 'chosen ones' when they have all the material luxuries of this world?" he said.

Although few clergy of the main churches in Manhattan are charismatic, none expressed opposition to charismatic churchgoers. Rev. Dan Sheetz of St. Isidore's Catholic Chapel in Manhattan expressed his stand on the charismatic movement, a view echoed by the clergy.

"Mankind has always had a desire for power, especially spiritual power. I am open to the charismatic groups. It's just not my bag."

At least two distinct charismatic groups operate in Manhattan: the largest is Manhattan Christian Community, led by Louis Kaup; the second is the Manhattan chapter of Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship, International, whose president is Stan Hoerman.

Cornelia Flora, K-State associate professor of sociology, said one reason people flock to religious groups is because of a quest for power, control and order in their lives.

Flora is author of the book, "Pentecostalism in Colombia: Baptism of Fire," published in 1976 by Associated University Presses.

"These people are searching," Flora said. "Something is going wrong in their lives: marriages, children or work. Perhaps their perception of the American dream didn't turn out right."

FLORA SAID another reason people turn to religion is that they begin to accept non-perfection in themselves.

TOMORROW: The "gifts of the Holy Spirit," speaking in tongues, prophecy, interpretation.

Cyclists to have own paths next fall

Phase I of a planned $40,000 city-wide bikeway system should be completed by the time K-State students return to school this fall according to City Engineer Bruce McCallum.

The first phase will provide Manhattan cyclists with a safe, well-defined system of routes connecting the K-State campus, downtown, City Park, Aggieville, Cico Park and Sunset Zoo, McCallum said.

The entire system will combine three classes of bikeways. Class I bikeways will be separate paths for cyclists only. Class II routes consist of streets with special designations for both bicycles and cars. Class III routes are city streets with signs designating them as part of the city's bikeway system.

THE BIKEWAY project was suggested by a K-State civil engineering class. The city found federal money was available for the project, applied, and received $32,000 for the bikeway, McCallum said.

The other $8,000 came from city funds, including bicycle license fees.

McCallum said Phase II of the project consists of mixing and expanding Phase I routes centering around elementary schools. He said no decisions have been made on when Phase II will begin.

"It depends on how well-received Phase I is and when monies are available," he said.

McCallum said Phase III will tie recreation areas (Tuttle Creek and the levy system) to existing routes, but plans for the last phase of the bikeway won't be made for at least another year.

Celebrities name their favorite fear

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)—Muhammad Ali is afraid of flying. John Wayne fears wind, water and fire. Art Buchwald is afraid of television's Walton family. And Charles Colson says he's not afraid of anything.

So reports the Yale Daily News Magazine, which asked celebrities around the world to respond to the question: "What are you most afraid of?"

THEIR answers are in the May issue of the magazine.

Muhammad Ali, the boxing champion, responded to the query with one of his renowned works of poetry. "Bugs and birds fly. Why should I? Man isn't supposed to get that high."

Humor columnist Buchwald, in contrast, explained he feared the Waltons because, "I am afraid they are all going to come over to the house someday and beat me up."

THE CONTRIBUTOR with the most fears apparently was film director Sam Peckinpah who said he was afraid of, among other things, "marriage, violence, one ex-mother-in-law, small children on motorcycles, a closed pub, big children on motorcycles, losing my second Academy Award and violence."

Anthony Burgess, the English novelist and critic, said he was afraid of hell. "That there is a hell awaiting us after this life, there can be little doubt," he wrote. "Don't let the rationalists kid you about there being nothing after life. There's plenty and it's bad."

Barbara Walters listed violence, kidnaping and being misquoted as her fears.

City Editor

Manhattan City Manager Les Rieger has been named in a petition filed by the Kansas Public Employees Union appealing a decision by the Kansas Public Employee Relations Board (PERB) which killed the union's recent bid to represent Manhattan's city employees.

The union cited "possible improper lobbying" by Rieger and 14 challenged ballots as the basis for its petition.

Union officials believe Rieger may have violated a Kansas statute when he sent three letters to city employees before the union election advising them to vote against the union.

The April 6 election, which ended in a 38-38 tie, marked the first time in Kansas history that a public union election wasn't decided by the employees. PERB director Jerry Powell said after the results were made public that the board would probably seek an opinion on the election from Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider.

SCHNEIDER'S decision was necessary, Powell said, because there are two conflicting state regulations dealing with election ties.

A Kansas statute allows that a tie constitutes a victory for "no representation" because a majority of voters didn't indicate they would join a union, and the union can't be certified unless it represents a majority of the employees.

PERB regulations, however, call for a runoff because there must be a majority opinion.

The day following the election, Powell announced he had decided to give "no representation" the victory in the election without Schneider's recommendation and the union said it was considering waiting a year before holding another election or filing a petition appealing the decision.

Rieger was named in the petition because union officials believed his lobbying against the union was in violation of a state statute which says the employer

(the city of Manhattan) must not take a stand on the issue.

SPECIFICALLY, the law says it is evidence of bad faith for the city to dominate, interfere or assist in the formation, existence of administration of any employee organization.

One city employee who supports the union said "there can be no question that the city violated this law."

Sent to PERB with the petition were three letters signed by Rieger which were sent to employees' homes and an anti-union cartoon which was attached to many employee check stubs.

The first letter, dated March 11, notified employees of the upcoming election. In the letter, Rieger said that agreements made between the city and the union "do not benefit all people equally, in fact, some employees have been put at a disadvantage by the agreement."

Rieger also said in the letter a union would prevent the city from dealing with employees as individuals and that he was convinced, "that you and your family are better off without a union. I hope you will agree and vote against union representation on election day."

IN A SECOND letter, dated March 28, Rieger lists $6 monthly union dues and several union promises as reasons to vote against the union.

"These are some of the reasons I believe that unions have many disadvantages," the letter said. "I sincerely hope you will consider these facts and consider voting no."

A final letter, dated April 5, the day before the election, lists voting places and times and ends, "After considering all the points I have raised I hope you will believe as I do that there are many disadvantages of having a union and that you vote against this bid of the union."

The cartoon that was attached to some employees' pay check stubs depicts a union representative with an outstretched hand telling an employee, "It's time to pay your $6 monthly dues."

The employee is shown thinking to himself that $6 times 12 months comes to $72 per year, and thinking of other things the money could buy, such as shoes for his children, movie tickets or gasoline. Beneath the cartoon is a

Pie pieces show where money goes

After five marathon sessions, Student Senate Thursday approved a finalized tentative allocations bill which exceeds by more than $4,000 the funds the body projects will be available next year.

But the proposed $110,000—against $114,356 the body tentatively allocated to non-line item groups—is based mainly on enrollment estimates. A more exact projection, probably larger than the current one, will be available in October, when senate goes into final allocations.

WHEN groups funded last year return surplus money, the body might have enough to maintain the tentatively allocated amounts, but surplus funds are impossible to estimate, said Meg Keeley, Student Governing Association (SGA) financial adviser.

In the last seven years, groups have returned as much as $14,000 and as little as $2,500, Keeley said. If the return is low, senate can make adjustments during final allocations or dip into reserve accounts to maintain the tentative funding levels.

Senate-funded groups can spend up to 25 per cent of their tentative allocations between the start of the fiscal year, July 1, and final allocations.

Several of the groups senate tentatively funded plan to appeal their tentative allocations in October to increase their funding.

Drug Education Center (DEC) received a $3,550 tentative allocation after senate refused to fund an assistant director for the group. DEC Director John Leslie said he plans to appeal the decision if senate has enough money.

We will wait and see what the money situation is—see if any groups return any money," Leslie said. "If they do, we will definitely appeal the bill."

"They (senate) have cut us back to less than half," he said. "They complain DEC is not being an educational center, and then they cut all of the funds we used to buy educational supplies. I really think senate has just hurt themselves."

SENATE also refused the University for Man (UFM) request for travel expenses to send UFM members to a conference the group will sponsor in the fall.

"There is a good possibility that we will appeal the bill," said Dave Ayres, UFM assistant campus coordinator. "It (senate's decision) was kind of dumb that we do not show up at our own conference."

Student Body President Terry Matlack said he would try to get funding for two more full-page SGA ads in the Collegian. An amendment which would have increased the SGA budget to include such an allowance was narrowly defeated at last Thursday's senate meeting.

Rec complex choices grow

By JANE HIGGINS
Collegian Reporter

Two new construction sites will be considered for the student recreation complex along with the four original sites near Memorial Stadium.

The Long Range Planning Committee moved Monday to consider the L.P. Washburn complex site and the West Stadium parking lot as sites for the complex. Students voted to pay for the complex with student fees in a referendum last spring.

One committee member suggested building a new fieldhouse in the vicinity of KSU Stadium and remodeling Ahearn Field House for use as a recreation complex. The committee didn't discuss that possibility any further.

THE ADDED site considerations will set back the committee's site recommendation to K-State President Duane Acker at least another week.

Committee members asked architects to draw up plans for the two new sites.

"If we go to the L.P. Washburn complex, we are separating out (the recreation facilities)," said Chet Peters, vice president student affairs. "But at least we would have some programmatic activities that have some staffing (at the Washburn complex) which could be combined with the student recreation complex."

Other members cited the distance of the Washburn complex from campus as a drawback to that site.

"The student recreation complex is supposed to be able to be used during the day and between classes," said Jane Kittner, junior in architecture and chairman of a Long Range Planning subcommittee to consider the four original sites. "The Washburn site ignores the premise to try to keep this a pedestrian campus."

The West Stadium parking lot site would in some way combine the parking lot and the recreation complex—possibly by having a multi-level building.

PAUL YOUNG, vice president for university development, said there might be difficulty in acquiring the parking lot for building construction.

"The acquisition of the West Stadium parking lot land was just funded for fieldhouse parking," Young said. "The state had to go to court to get some of that land."

The four original sites presented to the Kansas Board of Regents in a general description of the recreation complex—just south of Ahearn Field House, the field south of Memorial Stadium, West Stadium and East Stadium—met with opposition from some members of the planning committee.

The project architects, Ossman and Associates of Topeka, recommended the West Stadium site because of its closeness to the natatorium and West Stadium parking lot, retention of athletic fields and lower construction costs.

The special subcommittee to consider the four Memorial Stadium sites chose the site south of Memorial Stadium along Anderson Avenue.

Kittner said the main considerations of the committee were that the building be constructed on time and be an aesthetically pleasing addition to the campus.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE decided on the south site because it had the least drawbacks of the original four sites, Kittner said. She said the relocation of existing classroom facilities in both the East and West Stadiums were drawbacks to choosing those two sites for the complex. A new building on the West Stadium site would displace 20,000 square feet of art department space. An East Stadium site would displace 15,000 square feet of space now occupied by the Purple Masque Theater, the speech department and baseball facilities.

It is difficult to justify a movement from West or East Stadium which would involve 16,000 to 20,000 square feet of instructional space at a time when the University is short of instructional space, said John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs.

Some members of the committee were concerned with the cost of providing new space for the displaced departments.

Flu diagnosis angers poisoning victims

By DOUG HALL
Collegian Reporter

Kappa Kappa Gamma, sorority members exposed to food poisoning at a sorority formal April 16 were initially treated for flu at Lafene Student Health Center, despite their own diagnosis of food poisoning.

Twenty-six sorority members and their dates came down with flu-like symptoms after a dinner at the Downtown Ramada Inn in Topeka. Kansas health department officials later found four Ramada Inn cooks to be carriers of Salmonella infantis, a form of food poisoning.

"They (Lafene physicians) kept telling us it was the flu," said Christy Shrum, a sorority member who spent two days in Lafene. "We were questioning that because of all the people that got sick on Sunday afternoon (April 17).

"It was really maddening that we couldn't get the doctors to look at our cases as if they were food poisoning," Shrum said. "Some went to outside doctors and they were treated right away for food poisoning."

THE TREATMENT for food poisoning and flu are "essentially the same," said Dr. Stephen Phillips, staff physician at Lafene. In both cases medication is administered for diarrhea and vomiting.

"While food poisoning was considered, there were other possibilities too," Phillips said.

Shrum first went to Lafene on Monday following the dinner.

"The doctor I saw started to take a culture, but he didn't," she said. Shrum said she is unsure why the doctor decided against taking the test, which would have determined whether she had food poisoning. The test was not taken until Wednesday morning.

"You cannot get an instant reply to a laboratory study, especially for salmonella," said Roger Birnbaum, administrative assistant at Lafene. "It takes a long time to do that—almost a week."

"It's a complicated process, requiring a stool specimen," he said. "You don't take a stool specimen on every person who comes in."

AFTER GETTING positive results to salmonella tests of several women, Lafene Director Dr. Robert Sinclair notified the state Secretary of Health and Environment, Dwight Metzler. All persons attending the dinner are now being tested for the salmonella organism.

The state health department and Shawnee County Health Department have posted a food inspector in the Ramada Inn kitchen to ensure food preparation complies with state regulations, Metzler said.

"We're concerned that the outbreak does not continue and until we're sure of what's happening we're taking every precaution possible," Metzler said.

WASHINGTON—Raising a child, including education at a state supported university, today costs a typical middle-income family $64,000, a new study discloses.

A low-income family can raise a child a bit cheaper—only $44,000 on the average, said Thomas Espenshade, associate professor of economics at Florida State University.

A middle-income family needs between $16,500 and $20,000 after taxes to maintain what the government defines as a moderate standard of living. A low-income family needs between $10,500 and $13,000 after taxes.

Education costs are continuing to soar and those having a child now likely will pay much more to educate him in the future. The Oakland Financial Group of Charlottesville, Va. recently estimated the cost of our years at a state university in the 1990s would be $47,333, as contrasted to the Office of Education's estimate of a college education costing $8,416 in 1975.

WICHITA—A continuing crackdown on the showing of so-called pornographic movies in Wichita suffered a setback Monday in Sedgwick County District Court.

Neil Cook, 21, a Wichita State University student, was acquitted by a district court jury of a state charge of promoting obscenity for the Feb. 10 screening on campus of the film, "The Devil in Miss Jones."

The charge had been brought by the office of District Atty. Vern Miller against Cook, executive president of the Erotic Arts Society at WSU, for exhibiting the movie at the Campus Activities Center theater, and the film was seized.

WASHINGTON—President Carter proposed scrapping the present welfare system Monday and replacing it with a multi-tiered program to provide jobs for those who can work, cash for those who can't and income tax credits for the working poor.

The President promised he would complete the legislative proposals to implement the new system by the first week in August after consultations with legislative leaders in each of the 50 states.

He said the initial cost of the revised system he will propose won't cost any more than the present system, which is now budgeted at $23.6 billion for fiscal 1978.

RAWALPINDI, Pakistan—Armed mountain tribesmen supporting the current antigovernment movement have encircled some 1,200 Chinese laborers working on the Karakoram highway near the Chinese border, an informed source reported Monday.

The tribesmen, fierce Kohistanis who battled the Pakistan army for two months last fall, have bottled the workers up in camps as near as 70 miles to Pakistan's border with China.

The Kohistanis want Pakistan to release those tribesmen detained last October and November, and the acceptance of the opposition Pakistan National Alliance's demands that new elections be called and Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto resign, the source said.

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court on Monday rebuffed an attempt by three Watergate defendants to argue that their convictions should be reversed because of a rare news report about secret court proceedings.

The justices turned down without comment a request by lawyers for former Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and one-time White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman to file a supplemental memorandum outlining the impact of the news report.

The court took no action, however, on the appeals of the three officials of ex-President Richard Nixon's administration before it began a two week recess. No word on the appeals is expected at least until May 16, when the court meets again.

Opinions

Articles appearing on this page do not necessarily represent the entire Collegian staff or the Board of Student Publications.

Readers' comments welcome here

The old saw that says students are apathetic may have lost some of its teeth on the K-State campus this semester. That is, if interest in the issues of the day can be measured by the number of letters to the editor the Collegian receives.

The Collegian has received about 250 letters so far this semester, almost all from students. Although 250 may not sound like a great number, it's a relative flood compared to the number received in past semesters.

THE FLOOD is welcome. It shows people are reading the Collegian and are concerned enough to comment about what they read.

Apathetic people don't write letters to the editor. Concerned people write letters to tell the Collegian staff and other readers how they feel.

The Collegian has published as many of these letters as possible to allow letter-writers access to other readers and to show what other readers think.

THE 176 letters published to date were chosen to reflect a representative view from readers. Letters weren't chosen because they made the Collegian look good. Many letters were published because they criticized the Collegian and in the criticism showed readers were concerned about the quality of our work.

You readers have many opinions about a variety of subjects and aren't afraid to voice those opinions in the Collegian.

THAT'S the way it should be. The Collegian, as any other newspaper, is published primarily to inform, entertain and educate its readers and to stimulate discussion with editorials and letters.

The deluge is welcome. It shows that, contrary to what some might think, the public cares.

Keep those cards and letters coming.

The Arctic explorer reports

Greetings again from the Arctic Circle.

To my friends and fans—that means you, Mom—who may have missed my column last week, it wasn't there.

My heavy satire was a bit much for the staid editor-in-chief of our beloved campus rag sheet.

He said something about me "threatening the credibility of the Collegian."

FOR THOSE of you who might be interested in seeing my honest-to-Woodward-and-Berstein censored column, send a plain, brown self-addressed envelope to me, in care of the Collegian and I'll return a copy to you.

Last week, I learned the lesson that you should write about subjects of a little interest to a lot of people. This ensures a happy audience, happy editor and a happy me. Hence, greetings again, from the Arctic Circle.

Last Saturday night, the penguins, seals, walruses and arctic terns turned out to enter that great rookery on the west side of campus.

They turned out in flocks, herds and pods to hear the Doobie Brothers. After being in hibernation since April 3, the campus came to life with the sounds of arriving heavy trucks loaded with sound equipment. And the excitement grew until 8 p.m.

THIS DETACHED observer was there, lurking under a denim hat and hoping a frisbee wouldn't poop on my head or dive into my lap.

The audience was, as usual, well-behaved. Only a radio-controlled black-suited frisbee snatcher moved about with disturbing speed.

Actually, I was afraid someone might try to smoke some marijuana. You know "grass." Inhalation of marijuana smoke has been known to cause people to laugh, giggle, guffaw and then run about naked. Not wanting to fall under the influence and perchance catch a bad cold, I despaired someone might try to light up a reefer or "doobie" and pollute my air.

Needless to say, I breathed easier when I saw the crew-cut and firm jaw of the commander of the Office of Security and Traffic (or is it traffic and security?) Anti-Narcotics and Panty Raid Prevention Battalion and his men forming a cordon around the audience.

No one was going to get "high" that night.

It was reassuring to see, at the height of the concert, three campus cops back-to-back, each with a walkie-talkie to his ear.

The imaginary conversation went something like this:

"Reefer Madness, this is Roach Clip One. Who thought of these code names, anyway? I see a number going up in Section AA. And there's another one. I request assistance."

"Roach Clip One, you don't have to shout into your radio. I'm right behind you. Move in. Panama Red, back him up. Carl, you drop down from the rafters. This is Reefer Madness, out."

AS THE EVENING progressed, the commander of the K-State ANPRPB became more and more aware of the widespread lawlessness among the horizontally-striped, summer shirts and wedge-style haircuts. He soon made his fateful decision.

"We'll arrest them all. They're all breathing the same air, right? It could be a big conspiracy. What do you mean, I only have six men armed with cap pistols and water guns?"

"Look Duane, I'll call Ellis and we'll deputize the football team. We can lock them up in the basement of Nichols Gym. No?! Just give me a chance with that tear gas we bought back in '69. What? Go patrol the dairy barns? Well, if you say so, Duane. Reefer Madness out."

THUS, the crisis passed and the audience was saved.

Concert enjoyable

Editor,

The stars were with me Monday. I picked up the Collegian and got the straight poop on the Doobie Brothers' concert.

I might have wandered through life blind in my belief that I enjoyed Saturday's concert.

I KNOW now that it was the worst night of my life. The pits personified.

I will lay awake nights reliving each pitiless note, grating scraping at my soul, reverberating in my skull.

Thank you, thank you, thank you...

Stan Hoerman is a carpenter by day... by night he is the Manhattan president of Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship, International—an interdenominational charismatic prayer organization.

Hoerman told worshipers at a recent meeting to "Relax, enjoy the night and to let the Holy Spirit take charge"... And so the worshipers began to chant or sing in tongues, creating a sort of melodic, spiritual rap session.

"Before we sit down, could we give Jesus a hand?" Jesus received a standing ovation for about 10 seconds.

IN THE praise session, worshipers would cry out sporadically:

"Father, I love you!" "Jesus, You're wonderful!" "Blessed be God!" "Glory to God!" "Thank you, Jesus!" and "Hallelujah!"

woman's prayer organization. She sensed something different in groups, a "heightened sense of the supernatural... the presence of Jesus."

Charismatics described several gifts of the Holy Spirit: in the largest sense, all blessings, guidance, and God-given answers to prayer may be considered as spiritual gifts. But a Kansas Catholic priest who did not wish to be identified described the difference between spiritual and natural gifts.

"Each of us has natural gifts—sight, hearing, singing, oratory, or leadership—but these should not be confused with the supernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit," he said.

"Sometimes, God chooses the most unlikely persons on whom to bestow His spiritual gifts. He may endow the most timid person with prophecy, or impart wisdom on the most unlearned person."

In almost all charismatic groups interviewed, "tongues" are considered the sign that the Holy Spirit Baptism has occurred, me. It is beyond your greatest dreams."

AT GROUP meetings, touching is important part in fellowship.

"When I hug you, I am saying, 'I know Jesus is in you and I accept you as a brother or sister of Christ.' Touching is a way of expressing love," said Charlie Cook, former K-State engineering major and now leader of the East Moline, Ill., charismatic community.

Cook and his wife, Joan, believe touching can also cause a transference of divine energy from one person to another. In a charismatic Catholic mass it is often common for Catholics to take the hands of non-Catholics after communion.

"Jesus is Light, and within that Light there is a powerful energy field," Joan said.

Non-Catholic churchgoers are not permitted to receive communion, believed to be the body of Christ. Charismatics will often transfer grace believed gained from the Eucharist to Protestant charismatics by holding hands.

Also in group meetings, an altar call was common: worshipers going forward to be blessed, receive the baptism, healings or salvation.

During one meeting, speaker worked the jaws of "baby Christians"—to "loosen the tongues."

Often at various meetings, those responding to such an altar call would play the "dominos game," falling over backwards at the slightest touch of the speaker, thus becoming "slain in the spirit."

ONE RURAL community relied heavily on anointing subjects—people and material items—with holy oil. Olive oil was used but it had to be blessed by prayer—preferably prayed over by well-known charismatic leaders.

A few charismatics admitted to sometimes anointing their spouses's underwear with oil,

Doobies entertain at fraternity formal

Members of K-State Theta Xi fraternity and their dates who attended their spring formal Saturday night at the Ramada Inn didn't get to attend the Doobie Brothers concert but still heard some of the band members perform.

During the last set of the dance, members of the Doobie Brothers came in and played two selections, according to a member of Theta Xi.

After playing the band members went upstairs and got acquainted with several alumni members of the fraternity.

praying for their salvation and baptism of the Spirit.

One mother of two teenage daughters explained how she and her husband prayed over one daughter's T-shirt for the spirit of rebellion to leave their daughter.

In another interview, a sixth grade teacher told how she anointed two of her pupil's chairs with oil because they, too, had the spirit of rebellion in them.

Manhattan and other community charismatic leaders did not condone such activities.

TOMORROW: An article on the faith ministry: Healings, exorcisms and deliverances.

At group meetings, touching is an important part in fellowship.

Their eyes closed, hands raised, the praise continued for five or ten minutes and often was repeated throughout the night.

The worshipers come from all areas and occupations of life: the bearded, blue-jeaned college student majoring in theatre to the immaculately dressed engineer and his family.

With hands raised, they listen as the rancher from Olsburg sings, "10,000 Angels." Charismatics said they have completely surrendered themselves to the Lord and if their hands are raised and facing inwards it means they have received a blessing.

The newcomers, the not-yet "born-again-baby-Christians" are sandwiched between older, more experienced "Children of God." In meetings, all turn and greet each other with the "Kiss of Peace"—kissing, hugging each other and wishing "Peace be with you."

FELLOWSHIP is considered of prime importance by many of the charismatic-pentecostals. In the groups, they say, manifestations of the Holy Spirit are freely displayed.

KSDB show may soothe study strain

Relaxation is an important part of taking final exams and finishing semester projects.

To help students learn to relax, the Biofeedback Lab of the Counseling Center in Holtz Hall is again offering a radio show explaining different techniques which can help a person relax.

KSDB-FM will begin broadcasting the radio show at 11 p.m. today. It will continue on Thursday and Sunday at 11 p.m. and will also be broadcast on the same nights next week.

The first part of the radio show is an introduction to biofeedback, and the second part is a short version of a relaxation exercise. The program will end with the relation of one person's experience with biofeedback.

"There are so many students who are uptight about projects and exams," said Tim Lowenstein, author of the radio show who works in the biofeedback labs.

"With biofeedback, we hope to reverse the process of worry and anxiety," he said.

and an indication the Holy Spirit has penetrated the person.

The gift of tongues, charismatics say, serves three major purposes: to provide a special method for direct communication with God, to strengthen the individual who possesses it, and to serve as a tool in converting those who have not yet accepted the Gospel.

THREE K-State linguists who examined tapes of charismatics speaking glossolalia (tongues) were unable to determine if languages were being spoken.

"Individual linguists don't know every conceivable type of language," said Brian Oneil, graduate in speech. "We can say these samples sounded similar to familiar languages. It doesn't mean it was an actual language."

According to Oneil, some of the samples had sounds similar to Scandinavian, Hebrew and Arabic languages. Oneil said it was highly unlikely the samples were languages anyone could understand.

At one Manhattan prayer meeting, the praise session ended abruptly and without cue when a small, blonde-haired K-State student, with closed eyes, lifted her face upwards and said:

"My children, don't worry. If it looks like I am leading you all down different paths, I am. But the end point of each path is the same—my glory. Don't worry. But trust me."

"I can not yet reveal to you what I have planned for you, but trust

Undergrads get into research act for grades, honors and curiosity

By PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

K-State, a world center for agricultural and scientific research, does not limit its research to graduate students.

In nearly every department on campus, from political to poultry science, an increasing number of undergraduates are becoming involved in research. The types of research and reasons it is being done are as varied as the listings in the University line schedule.

Alan Goldstein has been working on a laser project for nearly a year. This alone would not generate much interest, but eyebrows are often raised when it becomes known that Goldstein is a 19-year-old sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and is building his own laser from scratch.

THERE are three main reasons why students are becoming involved in research projects. Usually, undergraduates doing research are either fulfilling a class requirement, receiving class credit for their work, or completing a requirement for their department's honors program.

A fourth reason is the curiosity of the students.

"A friend of mine acquired a neodymium crystal (used in crystal lasers) and wanted to build a laser out of it," Goldstein said. "So when I started out I was going to hunt around and find out what he needed to build a laser.

"I ran across several 'Scientific American' articles on lasers which got me interested," he said. "Somewhere in there I decided, 'well, hell, I'll just build one.'"

FOR THE honors program in the College of Arts and Sciences, the final requirement is an independent research project or another creative effort.

Students enrolled in the honors program must submit project proposals during their junior year for approval by the Honors Advisory Council. Projects are completed during the students' senior year.

Honor students in the College of Engineering are also required to do a project their senior year. Students are free to research their own topics, but must find a knowledgeable instructor to advise them.

"The people (instructors) in this program are top-notch," said William Honstead, Kansas Industrial Extension Service professor. "The program is designed to give the student experience with research and working on his own."

Students doing senior honors research in engineering receive one hour credit.

"My project involved studying the behavior of chickens in relation to three interactions and how a third party affects these interactions," said Dave Ylander, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and poultry science.

YLANDER studied the behavior of female chickens and how it changed when a male was introduced to the group. He recently received a merit award for his research from Gamma Sigma Delta, an agricultural honorary.

In the Department of Chemistry, students are required to do undergraduate research, but the research, however, is not limited to honor students.

"In our chemistry curriculum we require three hours of undergraduate research," said John Petersen, assistant professor of chemistry. "This amounts to one semester of research."

Many students go beyond their required semester of research, continuing because of their own interest. Ed Lustgarten, senior in chemistry, has carried on a project nearly a year over its required length.

"A few years ago, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) was finding different types of meat in samples of hamburger," Lustgarten said. "What they wanted to find was an easy method of distinguishing whether or not hamburger contained other types of meat such as horse, deer, or whatever."

Clifton Meloan, a K-State chemistry professor who had been doing research for the FDA, got Lustgarten started on the project for his independent research requirement. Lustgarten completed his requirement, but because of his interest in the project, kept working on it.

"Every meat has a different type of protein," Lustgarten said. "By running a meat sample through a process called disc electrophoresis, the protein will form a series of light and dark bands in the test tube."

THE BANDING process can be run on several types of meat which are used as controls. A sample of hamburger can then be tested and the bands compared with the control samples to determine what types of meat are present.

"What I am trying to do is get a set of standards," Lustgarten said. "I hope to set up a chart which the FDA can use as a standard for testing meat samples."

In chemistry, as in other science-related departments, undergraduate research is valuable if a student plans to enter graduate school.

"Research is your first main exposure to doing your own work," Lustgarten said. "Doing research is good if you want to go on to graduate school, because your main thing in graduate school is your research."

Mark Barnett, professor of psychology, is often approached by students who want to do research. He feels this is good for two reasons.

"On one hand you have the problem of grade inflation—if you can't distinguish a person's performance by their grades, another way of evaluation is needed," Barnett said. "Research helps distinguish student performance."

"Also, as a second reason, a student doesn't get the feeling of being lost in a crowd when involved in a research project," he said.

BARNETT, WHO typically has one or two undergraduates working with him on research projects, usually incorporates undergraduate work with that of a graduate student. This arrangement is also used in other departments.

"Undergraduates in this department are always involved with a graduate student," said Thomas Lester, assistant professor of nuclear engineering. "This gives graduate students a chance to work with instructing students, and gives undergraduates a chance to work with someone their own age."

"It's hard to do completely independent research without the proper training," said

(see K-STATERS, page 7)

Intersession work abroad; studying life down south

For most students, intersession means spending an extra week or two in Manhattan. For one group of students, however, it is a chance to do research south of the border.

Each January and May, a group of students under the direction of John Eads, K-State biology instructor, travel to Mexico to study plant and animal life. Each student making the trip is required to pick a topic or group of organisms and cover the area completely enough to give a full research report.

The studies done in Mexico are biology-oriented, but students doing the research are not necessarily biologists. Students taking the intersession course need only show an interest in doing the research.

The program was started in 1976, with Eads and Ron West, associate professor of geology, taking the first group.

"The last trip this past January was so successful that a number of animal specimens were flown back so students could continue their research," Eads said. "The program has been halfway successful in getting some students interested in marine biology."

EADS AND his group of researchers traveled to Puerto Penasco in January.

This is an unusual area because marine, desert and mountain specimens can all be studied.

Joe Matthews, senior in life sciences, was one student who had a group of animal specimens flown back for further study. Matthews studied arthropods in the area, and decided to continue his research into the semester.

"Eads suggested arthropods to me because no one had studied them in the past," Matthews said. "I'm going back in May and would like to run more tests to confirm my results."

Matthews centered his work around color changes in arthropods. He found that arthropods changed color according to two factors: photoperiod and the color of the substrate they were placed on.

ONE GROUP of students who went to Mexico in January had 23 sun stars flown back for further study. The group studied Heliaster Kubiniji—one type of sunstar—in the areas of repopulation, group movement and feeding habits.

As well as arthropods and sunstars, several other specimen types were also flown back. Desert animals were returned to K-State, plus several skull specimens.

LASER BEAMS...are the special project of Alan Goldstein, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine. Goldstein has built his own laser from scratch.

K-Staters test themselves, ideas in research work

Rich Johnson, senior in pre-medicine and biology. "I've learned a great deal from my research although I haven't had the specific training in this area."

Johnson, who is involved in determining certain characteristic traits of enzymes, got started on his project through Organic Chemistry II. As part of the lab requirement for the course, Johnson was required to spend half a semester doing independent research.

"I chose to do my research in the biochemistry department because of my own interests," Johnson said. "I fulfilled my research requirement, but because of my own interests, I kept on going."

MANY INSTRUCTORS also agree that it is difficult for an undergraduate to do completely independent research. Because of other class loads and activities, research is often pushed aside.

"A number of students are interested in doing research, it is just a question of time available to do the work and the ability of students to produce quality results," said Peter Althoff, professor of political science.

For most students involved in undergraduate research, time is a definite factor. After juggling time for classes, homework and other activities, it is hard to find time for a research project.

"I spent an average of 10 to 12 hours a week on my project while I was gathering data," Ylander said. "That really counts up after a while."

"A good research program requires an investment of time by students and faculty," said James Craig, professor of dairy and poultry science. "It is important to get a faculty member who is really interested in doing something like this."

ALTHOUGH MOST college instructors agree undergraduate research is a valuable learning process, it is not as universally agreed that every undergraduate should have the chance to do research.

"The nature of research demands that the student be bright because the problem is not laid out specifically," Lester said. "You can't possibly have research open to every student. You have to limit it to the best students in the department."

Involvement in undergraduate research can come through areas other than the classroom or laboratory. One example of this would be the Student Competition on Relevant Engineering (SCORE) project.

"The essence of the competition is to put our engineering knowledge to the test," said Rege Moore, senior in electrical engineering. "They're hoping to produce simple, low-cost ideas through the competition."

MOORE IS the team captain of a group of undergraduate engineers who will enter two projects in the competition in June. The projects will be entered in the energy resource alternatives competition and must consist of an alternative energy source that will ultimately produce electricity.

One project is an engine which runs on alcohol produced from an easily grown, high-sugar sorghum. The engine emits virtually no pollution and runs a generator.

The second project is a wind tower constructed on a large scale, using a pre-tested rotar design. The wind tower is located north of the new dairy barn and will be used to run generators, which will in turn run the hot water heaters in the new dairy barn.

The National Science Foundation also funds undergraduate research through the Undergraduate Research Participation (URP) program. Each summer, URP pays undergraduate students to do research for a university funded under the program.

This year, K-State received funding for their grant proposal. This summer ten students, including two from K-State, will work with eight faculty members for ten weeks studying the Konza Prairie.

Kurt Vantassel, senior in chemistry, received a research grant through the National Science Foundation last summer. Vantassel's project involved the attachment of organic ligands to a transition metal group. He has been working on the project for a year, full time during the summer and part time during the school year.

"The value of research plays an integral role in society," Vantassel said. "It's a tip of the iceberg. Possibly that's what I found so interesting about research."

RIEGER DECLINED comment Monday, citing legal implications which are being considered.

Manhattan City Attorney Ed Horne, said he also would not comment on the matter other than to say he's filed some motions with PERB to have the union's petition dropped.

Manhattan City Commissioner Robert Linder said he knew nothing about the matter.

"Ideally, they're (city administrators) supposed to keep us (the commission) informed, but I haven't heard anything about this," Linder said.

WHEN ASKED if the union may have lobbied beyond its legal right, R.A. Carraway, the union's international representative, said he didn't think so.

"All of our material we put out and the statements we (the union) made we feel were within the law," Carraway said.

Carraway also said there were 14 ballots which were challenged, some of which should be counted.

"There were some employees who were involved in the city's training program and had permanent employment status and who were city employees prior to the election registration cutoff date," he said. "Powell ruled those people were ineligible to vote but their votes should have been counted."

Manhattan's legal staff is now discussing the petition but has made no decision yet on how to handle it, according to Horne.

SNAFU

Dear SNAFU editor,

Did SNAFU do his own investigation of the rape situation at K-State?
C.R.

For fear of incriminating himself, SNAFU does not wish to comment about rapes on the K-State campus except to say that the future of rape here looks very bright.

With the end of this semester in sight, SNAFU can resist publishing this no longer. Without further adieu, here are "SNAFU's Most Favorite Comments," uttered during the year by several well-known mouths on campus:

"You may not realize this, but there are people who actually read your newspaper."—Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs, to a Collegian reporter in January.

"I've taken the basketball job at Oklahoma State. It was a very, very agonizing decision, needless to say."—Jack Hartman, head basketball coach, March 21.

"I've made a mistake. I made a turnover."—Jack Hartman, March 23.

"Jesus Christ! Well, if they want to sit out in the rain, let them. I hope they have a good time."—Chris Badger, student body president, when told on Oct. 26 that students were camping out for reserved basketball tickets two weeks before tickets went on sale.

"So, instead of endorsing one of the three candidates for student body president, the Collegian would like to nominate its own write-in candidate. He's a man K-Staters would follow anywhere—a leader right up there with Moses, Martin Luther King and Joan of Arc. Curtis Redding, lead us on."—Roy Wenzl, Collegian editor, in an editorial on Feb. 14.

"I have come to the conclusion that the resurrection of Jesus Christ is one of the most wicked, vicious, heartless hoaxes ever foisted upon the minds of men."—Josh McDowell, religious speaker, in a March Collegian ad.

"Shocked? I'm very surprised."—Terry Matlack, student body president candidate, said Feb. 16 after learning of a run-off election.

"Boy, was that close."—Terry Matlack, newly elected student body president, Feb. 23.

"...anyone who has my name can't be all bad."—basketball star Curtis Redding, Feb. 17.

"Politics is tough and mean, no place for the weakhearted. Don't fall for that crap about the principles of democracy."—Barry Flinchbaugh, assistant to K-State President Duane Acker for legislative affairs, March 22.

"I'm not going to be critical of them (administrators). The buck really stops with me. I've been involved in other areas of the University and haven't zeroed in on these problems."—President Acker, upon being informed that student body president Badger had blasted University administrators with criticism of incompetence.

"We had them so fast they didn't know what hit them. You could look at the expression on their faces and you could tell they were saying, 'hey, what's going on here?'"—basketball star Darryl Winston said after the second conference game against Missouri.

"Manhattan, gateway to Wamego."—Bob Hope, in concert, Sept. 11.

Korbe dreams of pro ball

By TERRY REILLY
Collegian Reporter

Fourteen years ago this summer, a young baseball player from Hays embarked on a career that would lead him to stardom in major college baseball.

That player—Greg Korbe, K-State's right-fielder and leading batter.

Most little leaguers at some time dream of the day they will lead their team in a shot at a title, but few ever actually see it happen.

NOT SO for Korbe.

The 20-year-old team leader, who earned second team all Big Eight last year, seems destined for bigger things this year as K-State approaches the Big 8 post-season tournament May 18-21 in Oklahoma City.

Hitting .415 this year, Korbe put to rest criticism of not being consistent enough at the plate.

His six homeruns and 31 RBIs have made other teams aware of his talent and few dare to challenge the right-fielder's ability to throw advancing runners out on the base paths.

His strong arm may have been the result of the time Korbe spent as a pitcher before reaching K-State. In fact, Korbe began his career as a pitcher and didn't make the switch to outfield until he reached college.

Sports

KORBE DOESN'T mind the change.

"I didn't think I was that good in the infield," he said in reference to his playing experiences at shortstop and second base in addition to his pitching.

Though Korbe dreams of being a major leaguer some day, it wasn't until his junior year in high school at Thomas More Prep that he seriously began thinking about any kind of future in baseball.

"I tried to play basketball and I placed kicked in football my junior year," Korbe said of his high school athletic career. But baseball was his main sport.

And the dedication to baseball has paid off, making him K-State's most feared hitter.

WITH AN eye on the future, the K-State junior said he would like to use his remaining year of eligibility and then look to the professional ranks.

Other K-State baseball players in the past have been offered contracts before their senior year was finished, but Korbe won't leave K-State unless an offer is good enough to ensure his education should baseball fall through.

Assessing players now in the professional ranks, Korbe doesn't have any one particular player he follows closely, but he was impressed with George Brett's hitting philosophy when Brett visited K-State and talked with team players a year ago.

As to which teams he likes in the majors, Korbe mentioned the new American League expansion clubs, Toronto and Seattle.

Korbe's biggest inspiration comes not from some big name in the majors, but rather from his father, whom he calls "the best coach I've ever had."

"My dad helped me a lot," Korbe said. "I owe a lot to him."

AT THE same time, Korbe had praise for his mother.

"She knows more about baseball than most the guys I know," he said. But his father received most of the praise.

"He wants me to do real well," Korbe said. "He's been a real motivation."

Korbe hasn't set any particular goals this season, other than just trying to maintain concentration at the plate.

"I'm more of a pull hitter," he said. "I'd love to see more balls fly over the fence."

Iowa star signs with Cats

Brent Murphy, all-state forward from Clinton, Iowa, has signed K-State's first 1977 basketball letter-of-intent.

The 6-7, 205-pound Murphy enjoyed a brilliant, three-year career at Clinton's St. Mary's High School. Murphy led the Irish to a pair of Iowa state titles.

K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman made the announcement Monday.

Noted for his all-around basketball skills, Murphy gained all-state and all-conference honors his senior year and was named captain of the 1977 class A state tournament all-star team.

Murphy averaged 19.7 points and 12.4 rebounds per contest in 1976-77 and hit 57.5 per cent of his field goal attempts.

He finished his high school career with 900 rebounds (better than 12 per game) and 1,306 career points (18.1 per game) in helping St. Mary's to records of 23-2, 17-5 and 24-1 during his sophomore, junior and senior seasons. He scored 22.5 points a game his junior year.

Rugbers lose in Colorado

By KRIS TILSON
Collegian Reporter

K-State women's rugby team failed to bring home top honors in the Colorado women's tournament this weekend.

The team lost to the University of Colorado in their first game Saturday. The game was tied 4-4 and went into overtime. The contest was determined by the best of seven scrum-downs. K-State lost 4-1 in overtime.

It defeated a motley team of two B squads from Colorado State University and CU 44-0. A motley team consists of combining players from two short-membered teams in order to have 15 people to play.

K-STATE'S FINAL defeat of the double-elimination tourney came Sunday morning when they lost to the Southern California All-Star Team 3-0 when California scored on a penalty kick. The All-Star team went on to win the tournament.

Kim Sanders, team president, said California had to come out of the losers' bracket to win the event. They played six games Sunday with their final game against the Denver Blues. The All-Stars had lost to the Blues in their first match.

"They have to be one of the finest teams we've seen just from their stamina," Sanders said.

She said the tournament had teams that were better competition than area teams.

"Competition-wise, those were the five best teams we've seen," she said.

SANDERS SAID one of K-State's problems was its turnover rate for players. Non-school sponsored teams play together all year.

"This is the first year we've played with the same full side," she said. "It wasn't as if we got wiped all over. Those tough games could have gone both ways. We have the potential."

She also said the lack of high caliber local teams to compete against as a disadvantage in playing in tournaments.

"We play local teams that don't have the class and finesse and we go out there (Colorado) and play like we're used to. If we played teams like that I think we'd be tops," she said.

The tournament was at Colorado Women's College, although that school had no representatives in the contest. Ten teams competed besides K-State. They were California All-Stars, Denver Blues, Scarlet Harlets, Colorado State University, University of Colorado and motley teams from Golden, Colo., Montana, the B squads of CSU and CU and Gunnison, Colo.

K-State men's and women's teams will host the Sunflower Tournament this Saturday and Sunday.

Cats finish ninth in tennis tourney

K-State's women's tennis team finished ninth out of 22 teams in the Missouri Valley Tournament last weekend.

"All six girls won points," said Steve Snodgrass, tennis coach. "The doubles team of Becky Buller and Lisa Beymer reached the finals of the consolation bracket."

The women's team finishes their season against Kansas at 2 p.m. today at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Complex. The men's team will play in Lincoln, Neb. this weekend.

Film mixes human deception with reality of Civil War era

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Beguiled" will be shown in the Union Forum Hall today at 3:30 and 7 p.m. Admission price is $1.

By KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

A sedate girls' school nestled safely in the deep South away from the raging Civil War is the setting for the fascinating movie, "The Beguiled."

A wounded Yankee soldier, Col. John McBirney, played by Clint Eastwood, is found by a schoolgirl and taken to Farnsworth Seminar for Young Ladies.

The school's director, Miss Martha Farnsworth, played by Geraldine Page, decides to take him in only until the next Confederate patrol comes.

EASTWOOD DOES an excellent job as McBirney. The role is quite complex involving lying, charming, seducing and bitterness and Eastwood is convincing.

All the characterizations are achieved without seeming contrived or stiff, making the film moving and frighteningly realistic.

The filming is handled well, incorporating many important aspects. The transitions are smooth, making it easy to follow.

The horrors of war are not spared from the viewer but are depicted without being grossly explicit.

The movie isn't a nice, easy-going film but an intense, disturbing one. The plot is deeply seeded with sex, jealousy and sickening realizations. It is well-done, however, and makes its point well.

Policewoman Atkins works confidently on county beat

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

A barroom fight report at a nearby Manhattan tavern cracked over the patrol car radio, and the officer flipped sirens on and sped to the scene.

Several drunken men loitered nervously outside and told the officer—the first at the scene—a guy inside was going berserk with a pool cue, clubbing a man on the floor. The officer reacted quickly, walked confidently into the bar and soon emerged with the man creating the disturbance.

The officer was a woman. Officer Debbie "Peaches" Atkins became the Riley County Police Department's (RCPD) first black female police officer one and a half years ago. She came into the job with four years experience as a New York City policewoman working a tough Harlem beat.

ATKINS LIKES the change. "I like the slower pace out here and the people are a lot friendlier," she said.

Ironically, Atkins confronted her first life and death situation in Manhattan when she was faced with subduing a man aiming a gun at her. She responded by instinct, she says, and swung a billy club down hard on the man's wrist.

Since then, Atkins has been assaulted by two men wielding a knife and a sledgehammer. Both incidents ended with the assailants led off to jail and Atkins unharmed.

On the surface, Atkins seems to be fearless, but she admits to shakiness after a dangerous incident.

"If you control your fear, whatever you do in a situation will be levelheaded," she said, adding fear sets in shortly after a close brush with death.

"I haven't shown fear in any situation. That's not to say I'm not scared."

ATKINS SAYS relations between herself and fellow RCPD male police officers is good, although she said some were hesitant about placing their confidence in the hands of a woman. But now the officers treat

Atkins like "one of the guys," she said.

"You can't be a touchy female in a job like this," she said, referring to a policewoman's reaction to the male officer's sometimes vulgar language.

Atkins maintains a friendly relationship with the people on her south side beat—a beat which is largely low-income. She says that is the most important aspect of police work.

"You can't work in a city where you don't know people, because you're working for them," she said.

ATKINS . . . Four years on a Harlem beat.

Domestic disturbance calls, which she says cause 87 per cent of police deaths, don't frighten her because of a mutual trust established with people in her. She says that whenever an officer knows the persons involved in a domestic disturbance they realize the officer is both a friend and a representative of the law.

ATKINS PULLED her patrol car to a stop in front of a house where an elderly woman was waving. For several minutes she chatted with the woman and left with a promise that she would be back. Further down the street, children called out, "Peaches, Peaches" and Atkins waved back.

"I feel good having that kind of relationship with the kids, because if there's any trouble—guys pushing dope in the schools—then they'll want to tell me," she said.

Atkins emphasized the importance of the police establishing good relations with children at an early age.

"I feel if the first contact a child has with an officer is on a friendly basis then he will grow up with a respect for the police," she said. "If an officer can leave a good impression on a child, then it may possibly be a deterrent to him in crime as he grows older."

AS A CHILD, Atkins said she was always independent and attributes her independence to an ability to perform police duties without relying on police backup. "I've always been kind of a loner," she said.

Atkins drove the next few hours without incident, checking deserted businesses for burglars and patrolling residential streets. She said the one part about police work she dislikes is boredom.

Through police academy training, Atkins said she learned that police work is "hours and hours of boredom interrupted by brief moments of terror."

Sometimes, however police work can be humorous, Atkins said. She responded recently to a call of a stray cow in a residential area.

"I thought, 'What am I supposed to do with this cow?'" she said. The owners of the cow eventually roped it and led it away, she said.

Atkins says she was inspired to become a policewoman by her father, who is a police captain at the Yonkers, N.Y., police department.

"Every day is different," she said. "You never can anticipate what the day will bring, because you'll come across different situations."

Commission to hear debate by residents on seismic code

Manhattan residents will have a chance to discuss a proposed relaxation of the city's seismic zone listing in a public hearing at tonight's Manhattan City Commission meeting.

The commission has previously discussed changing Manhattan's earthquake listing from Seismic Zone II to Seismic Zone I for all buildings other than fire and police stations and hospitals.

Manhattan is listed Seismic Zone II because of the Nemaha Fault which runs north-south about four miles east of the city. Seismic zone ratings range from zero to three, with zone III areas being most earthquake prone.

Design and construction requirements of buildings to be built in Manhattan would be affected by a change in the city's seismic zone listing. Structural requirements of zone II call for additional foundation support and more uniform building designs than the requirements of zone I.

THE MANHATTAN Retirement Foundation's planned elderly center would be directly affected by a change in seismic zone listing. The foundation's application for zoning was halted earlier this year because the planned building would not meet zone II requirements.

Newest fraternity ready to move in

After a few changes in its house contract, K-State's newest fraternity, Pi Kappa Phi, will soon begin residency in its new home at 421 N. 16th, according to Ronn Smith, Pi Kappa Phi president.

The fraternity colonized at K-State in November but in order to receive a national charter the fraternity is required to fulfill certain national and Interfraternity Council regulations.

One requirement is to successfully operate a house for one semester, Smith said.

THE FRATERNITY hopes to begin its lease June 1 in what is the old FarmHouse fraternity house.

"We are just taking over the first floor and basement of the house to begin with," Smith said.

Because of the limited space, only 10 or 15 men will live in the house. There is a possibility for expansion later, Smith said.

The members are also considering whether or not to go through procedures to become a non-profit organization.

"If we do incorporate, it will mean going through corporate procedures, which will delay contract signing," Smith said.

Roses: couple loses sweet smell of victory in struggle to save marriage site

By JANE HIGGINS
Collegian Reporter

A drive to save the Formal Rose Garden west of Justin Hall by the first couple ever to be married there will probably be fruitless, said Paul Young, vice president for university development.

The garden is scheduled for removal from its original site late this fall to make room for the new general classroom and office building, Young said.

Francis and Edna Johnson were at K-State last week protesting the destruction of the garden. The couple exchanged marriage vows under the garden's arch in August, 1930 and were the first of a long line of couples married in the rose garden.

"Landmarks should be perpetuated," Mr. Johnson said.

"When we come back to K-State and can't see anything that we recognize, we are sort of lost."

THE COUPLE hopes to save the rose garden in its original site.

"There is nothing wrong with the new building (general classroom and office building), but they could put that somewhere else," Mr. Johnson said.

Young said the protest is too late to change the site plan of the new building.

"As far as we are concerned, the architects have been instructed and are in the process of drawing up final plans for that site," Young said. "In that process, we've passed the point at which the site can be reconsidered."

Young said $219,600 has already been invested in the plans of the general classroom and office building.

"To change the site at this point would involve the repetition of most of that expense."

THE ROSE GARDEN won't be eliminated, Young said. It will be relocated with the Conservatory on Denison Avenue in front of the dairy barn and will serve as a laboratory for students in horticulture.

The Johnsons said they believe alumni should have a say about campus construction which would change landmarks. They are both graduates of K-State and members of the Wichita Alumni Association of K-State.

Mrs. Johnson said because the University is always sending them requests for donations, it was inconsiderate for the alumni to have to find out about the elimination of the rose garden through hearsay.

She urged alumni, students and Manhattan citizens interested in preserving University landmarks to draw up petitions and write letters to K-State President Duane Acker and the K-State alumni magazine, in protest of the garden destruction.

The K-State Alumni Association has taken no action in the protest, said Thomas Potter, K-State Alumni Association president.

"I'm sure that the alumni have an interest and concern and we listen to them," Young said.

Residents' opinions conflict on construction guidelines

By TERRY BRUNGARDT
Collegian Reporter

Residents of K-State dormitories are calling the new room construction guidelines, established last week, ambiguous and too strict, although others see the need for fire safety in the halls.

K-State Housing compiled a list of regulations to comply with guidelines suggested by Floyd Dibbern, state fire marshal which eliminate many methods now used to remodel dorm rooms.

"I think the rules are too strict and they don't back up their reasons for the regulations," said Fred Suhr, Haymaker Hall resident. "Some of the guys are going to try to follow the rules but most are going to try to hedge as much as they can."

Some residents said they would have moved out of the halls if they had known about the new regulations earlier.

WITH RESIDENCE hall payments increasing, students aren't going to want to live in the dorms next year if they can't remodel their rooms, said Dennis Woodall, Haymaker resident.

Deborah Diehl, a resident of a three-person Van Zile room, said she would not return to the hall if she had to live with two other girls and couldn't remodel her room.

Some fire hazards need to be taken care of, said Steve Foerster, another Van Zile resident. But other hazards—such as only one fire exit on the third floor of Van Zile—should be taken care of before discontinuing room construction, he said.

"Instead of not letting us build, they should stress fire prevention," Woodall said. "This would stop fires more than anything else."

RESIDENTS WHO don't reconstruct their rooms said the new regulations are a good idea and should be instituted to prevent injuries from fires.

Until a better explanation of the regulations is given, some residents said they don't know what they will do with their rooms next year.

One of the major ambiguities in the new regulations is the definition of the term "flame spread number." The regulations say any material used in construction must have a flame spread number greater than 75.

Goodnow Hall resident Russ Sherwood said he and other Goodnow residents could not get exact definitions of the term from the Manhattan Fire Department and the city fire inspector.

"The flame spread test to determine the safety structure is probably valid, but the way it is used is not," Sherwood said.

Stamey's new tenure policy angers some faculty members

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Several faculty members from the College of Arts and Sciences voiced protest Tuesday against what they consider flaws in a recently enacted tenure and reappointment plan for the college.

William Stamey, dean of arts and sciences, called a special meeting after the new system—which he designed—brought complaints from members of the mathematics department. About 70 arts and sciences faculty members attended the session.

The new tenure system calls for all department heads to make tenure recommendations to Stamey based in part on written evaluations by tenured faculty members in their department.

"This system was given to us without consulting us," said Louis Herman, assistant professor of mathematics. "Since comments must be written, we cannot express ourselves fully."

THE NEW SYSTEM states if a faculty member does not submit a written evaluation, the omission will be construed as a negative recommendation. Several faculty members protested this clause.

"If you get some kook—and sometimes you do—who doesn't write a letter, then it counts as a vote against the person," Herman said.

"Our department head told us that a failure to reply would be construed as a negative recommendation," said George Strecker, associate professor of mathematics. "Failure to reply should be construed as a failure to reply, not as a negative recommendation."

Another mathematics professor, John Marr, said it was too restrictive to have a uniform system for all departments.

"We don't make one horseshoe to fit all horses," Marr said. "If different departments have different systems that work for them, I see no reason to marry ourselves to one system. It just puts a straight jacket on everyone."

SEVERAL FACULTY members expressed concern that if they wrote anything derogatory about a tenure candidate, those comments might be held as evidence against them in a libel suit.

Vincent Gillespie, associate professor of English, said many of those fears were unfounded because malicious intent would have to be proven for a case to stand up in court.

"There is a general fear in the faculty that if they say something they cannot document with hard evidence, that they will be held liable in a lawsuit," Gillespie said.

STAMEY SAID he believed the new system was necessary and appropriate.

"All of the new system falls within guidelines set by the Faculty Senate and the Board of Regents," he said. "Many of the departments are using parts of this system now."

"For a person to earn tenure, they must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that they are fit for tenure," he said. "Proof of fitness is enhanced by the support of tenured faculty."

"Tenure is so serious that we just have to do it right," Stamey said. "We have tenured a lot of people whom we should not have tenured. There are a lot of people who, if there were a thorough written evaluation, would not be there."

Man charged with pair of burglaries

The arrest of a 19-year-old man and two juveniles in Manhattan Monday night may clear up dozens of recent burglaries in the area, police say.

Lewis Sloniker, Seattle, Wash., was charged in Riley County District Court Tuesday with two burglaries. He and two 16-year-old boys were picked up in a car going the wrong way on a one-way street.

The juveniles and Sloniker were questioned about as many as 27 break-ins in Manhattan and Ogden. All were at restaurants or taverns and involved the pilfering of vending machines.

It's back to nature as repairs this week in a restroom in Dickens Hall forced the moving of toilets outside the building.

Charismatics tell stories of healings

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a four-part series on the charismatic-pentecostals in the midwestern United States.

By BECCY TANNER
Staff Writer

June Frandle, a middle-aged housewife from Topeka, believes in a creative healing energy she calls God. She is convinced the world is full of this energy.

This energy, she believes, healed her of a pituitary gland tumor.

"About three years ago I was taken to the hospital because of high blood pressure and extreme dizziness," Frandle said. "They did a brain scan and several skull X-Rays. The doctor wanted me to see a neurosurgeon, but I didn't because I got to feeling better," she said.

One year later, Frandle was taken to the hospital again with the same symptoms. More studies and tests were made. Physicians found her skull enlarged and a tumor on the pituitary gland. Doctors told her she had to go through one more test, an arteriogram, to locate the tumor and its size.

FRANDLE IS THE leader for two prayer groups in the Topeka area and "always has people dropping by." It was in her home, she said, she was prayed over by friends and elders of her church.

"On early Monday morning, the radiologist came into the room for me to sign the papers for the release because of the test's severity."

"As he was leaving the room, I said, 'Don't be surprised if that thing is gone, because people all over the world are praying for it (to disappear).'"

"I don't know what caused me to say that. But the doctor looked at me kind of stunned and said, 'Well, we need all the help we can get.'"

Two hours later, Frandle was having surgery on an arteriogram.

"When they were two-thirds complete with the test, a little nurse friend of mine saw Dr. Lawson, the radiologist, stroke his chin and say, 'I don't understand it. It's so unusual. It isn't there... It's gone.'"

The neurosurgeon sent the studies done on the tumor to a specialist in San Francisco, who said the tumor had apparently bled and shrank away.

THE FRANDLE CASE is on file in the office of her physician, Curtis Nystrom, of Topeka.

"We dismissed June shortly, because she told us, she wanted to be prayed over," Nystrom said. "Because of the severity of the test, she was granted her wish. In that amount of time the tumor completely disappeared."

"Now, people can say it was a coincidence, but the radiologist and I don't seem to think so."

A healing, charismatics say, is the process by which a person who is wounded or sick becomes whole or healthy. They often described their healings as "an intense, cleansing sensation or a burning."

E.H. Thiele, a retired farmer of rural Manhattan, said he was "healed miraculously by the Lord of a back ailment."

"I had one leg that was three-quarters of an inch shorter than the other. I had to wear a built up shoe. On Jan. 23, 1973, I happened to attend a church service in which the speaker announced there was 'someone in the congregation who had a back problem.' I figured he meant me."

According to Thiele, as the man touched him he felt a "warm flash and felt my leg growing to its proper length."

JOHN WERTIN, a Manhattan charismatic chiropractor, prays with his patients for healings.

"I sometimes pray with my patients," he said. "They often need a better physician than me. Because of prayer I have often had healings take place in this office."

"The healings I've seen were not those you would actually see happen in front of your eyes. Someone can be sick and within a week completely free of the symptoms that would normally have taken months to heal," Wertin said.

Charismatics believe in two kinds of healings: physical and inner.

Joan Cook, a former resident of Manhattan and now leader of a charismatic group in East Moline, Ill., defined an inner healing as:

"The healing of the mind, will and heart but includes other areas as emotions, psyche, soul and spirit. Jesus wants us well, to carry out His will."

"A physical healing only heals our bodies. An inner healing heals our spirit," she said.

THOSE INTERVIEWED were often hesitant to talk about their own "healing of the memories," but one Manhattan resident described it this way:

"I was taken back to the moment of my birth and with Jesus, relived painful moments with Him protecting me and healing all unpleasant thoughts." Visualization in an inner healing, many said, is important.

"Mental pictures are necessary," Cook said. "People need to picture themselves well and happy, otherwise subconsciously they will reject any healing taking place."

Sometimes within the context of prayer of an inner healing, some Military urged by lawyer to keep minority education

By DENISE NICKLE
Collegian Reporter

Militant action created minority educational programs and militant action must keep those programs alive, says Willie Garibay, a Chicano lawyer from Denver.

Garibay, a 1972 K-State graduate, spoke Tuesday in the Union about contemporary Chicano problems as part of the Latino Awareness series sponsored by MEChA, a Chicano student organization.

"Only people united in struggle will free themselves," he said.

THE NATION'S educational system isn't geared to meet the needs of third-world students. And minority programs at universities are an attempt to deal with hundreds of years of oppression, Garibay said.

A recent decision by the California Supreme Court pending in the U.S. Supreme Court may threaten minority educational opportunities. The California Supreme Court ruled a quota at a university requiring 10 per cent of medical school admissions to be minority students discriminatory against whites, he said.

"A lot of white students feel gains and programs of third-world students are cutting into their education," Garibay said.

IT'S NOT a question of quotas, he said, but the real question is why more minority students aren't in the universities.

Students face enormous tuition hikes and financial aid cuts, he said, which may make higher education an exclusive privilege of the rich.

"Education is a right, not a privilege," Garibay said.

Garibay blamed the capitalistic system for minority oppression.

"We live in a political and economic system where power is in the hands of the few," he said.

CHICANOS have lost their culture, their way of life and the power to determine their own destiny, he said. Employers are just beginning to hire minorities, but police and the courts still abuse them.

As an example of minority injustice, Garibay told about a Denver black man arrested for robbery although witnesses said he wasn't involved. His jailers clubbed him to death as he cried out his innocence.

No action was taken against the policemen involved, he said.

While rich developers take the Chicano's land, he said, the courts have burned records which support the peoples' claim.

"Courts constantly side with the rich," he said. "You can't rely on courts for justice."

Garibay said people must organize to fight apathy and indifference. "It's going to get worse unless people wake up to what's going on," he said.

TOPEKA—Broadcast executive Thad Sandstrom was shot to death in his bed before dawn Tuesday, and 12 hours later the district attorney said he would charge Sandstrom's wife with first degree murder in the slaying.

Milda Sandstrom, 53, was placed under police guard at Stormont-Vail Hospital, where she was taken soon after the shooting was reported for apparent treatment of a drug overdose.

Sandstrom, 51, broadcast vice president for Stauffer Publications of Topeka, was found with two gunshot wounds in the back of his head, apparently from a .32-caliber revolver found at the scene. He apparently was shot from close range as he slept in his bed in the couple's home.

Sandstrom had filed for divorce late Monday in Shawnee County District Court, alleging incompatibility.

The district attorney said Mrs. Sandstrom was in Oklahoma at the time visiting her father at Wynnewood, and apparently drove back to Topeka Monday night after being advised of the divorce filing.

WASHINGTON—America's population of 216 million persons is growing older and expanding slower than it did a year ago, the Census Bureau said Tuesday.

The bureau said the median age of the population jumped from 27.9 years in 1970 to 29.0 in 1976.

And it reported that the United States population of 216 million was only 1.6 million—or .7 per cent—more in January 1977 than in January 1976.

It found that 43 per cent of women in their early 20s were still single in 1976, compared to 28 per cent in 1960. And it reported that 42 per cent of women in their early 20s who had been married remained childless in 1976, compared to 24 per cent in 1960.

The bureau said the total fertility rate—the number of children the average woman would have at the end of her childbearing years if the rate did not change—hit a record low for the fifth consecutive year, dropping from 1.80 in 1975 to 1.76 in 1976. The rate was 2.4 in 1970.

TOPEKA—Gov. Robert Bennett unleashed Tuesday the most severe tongue-lashing he has given the legislature in the three sessions he's been governor, and threatened to call a special session.

If he decides it is in the best interest of the state and its citizens, Bennett said, he will veto an income tax exemption and conformity bill and call the lawmakers back for a special session.

He said he wouldn't expect the entire legislature to return May 11, the day scheduled for final, ceremonial adjournment, and take care of the problems he sees in the income tax bill which was sent to him last Friday.

The governor also said he is weighing the possibility of letting the income tax bill stand—probably without his signature—and vetoing instead the school finance bill. Both would cost the state more than $4 million, a revenue loss Bennett isn't convinced the state can stand.

PARIS—Representatives of the United States and Vietnam opened formal negotiations Tuesday on the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two governments. An agreement is expected quickly.

The two delegations, headed by Richard Holbrooke, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Southeast Asian affairs, and Vietnam's Deputy Foreign Minister, Phan Hien, met for three-and-a-half hours in the newly-opened Vietnamese embassy. They will meet again Wednesday.

At the end of the meeting, Holbrooke and Hien smilingly shook hands in an apparent reflection of the warm atmosphere at the talks.

Obscenity battle suffers setback

The battle to enforce Wichita's obscenity law as interpreted by Sedgwick County Attorney Vern Miller suffered a surprising setback Monday with the acquittal of Neil Cook on obscenity charges.

Miller confiscated "The Devil in Miss Jones" after a private showing of the film by the Wichita State University Erotic Arts Society Feb. 10. Cook, director of the society, was charged with promoting obscenity.

THE ACQUITTAL surprised both Cook and Miller, who said, "we felt without question the charges were justified and certainly this in no way indicates that our obscenity law is not a good law."

While the law may be good, the decision in the Cook case indicates Miller's interpretation may not be.

The anti-pornography campaign and crackdown policy are what the people want, Miller contends. If the courts are any indication of the wishes of the people he is only half right.

This year two obscenity cases have been tried by jury, one finding against the operators of an adult theater and the Cook case, which indicated Miller had gone too far.

ONE OF the great advantages of law in this country is that through judicial interpretation it can remain flexible.

This same flexibility of interpretation, however, also applies to overly ambitious law enforcement personnel unless curtailed by the court.

In a way, the acquittal was disappointing, Cook said. He wanted to determine the constitutionality of the law in a higher court through an appeal.

Miller does not plan to appeal the decision. Perhaps he realizes he has gone far enough.

WANTED

Large manufacturing concern seeks Kansas high school graduates for training program. Successful completion of program guarantees successful completion of program. Serious intent not necessary. Slave mentality helpful. Applicants should possess enough initiative to solve fairly complex problems, but not enough to seriously question the program itself. Reversed pay system.

A cynic is one who would expect the next line to read: Apply Office of Admissions, Kansas State University."

The cynic would be partly right. In many ways, K-State is nothing more than a sophisticated degree mill. That's not all it is, but the factory analogy becomes painfully relevant at every May graduation.

THE YEARLY commencement exercises serve only to shatter our idealized notions of university life.

It is difficult to maintain images of small groups of scholars and students exchanging hypotheses and research results in the face of 3,000 units in funeral garb rising and falling with the incantations, "College of Agriculture, please stand. I confer the degree...sit down"—all strangely reminiscent of the old high school cheer, "Stand up, sit down, fight, fight, fight."

It's in the University's best interests to avoid the factory image. Perhaps this explains the administration's reluctance to hold December commencement exercises.

Letter to the editor

Remark sparks confrontation

Editor,

This letter is in reference to the Great Debate in front of the Union Wednesday afternoon during which two students claiming some connection with the K-State Athletic Residence Hall made fools of themselves.

The debate was peaceably terminated despite the incompetence of one campus patrolman.

LET ME briefly describe the incident that day. Some student, whom I shall refer to as the victim, took chalk in hand to express his opinion on the sidewalk.

His statement read: "If I lived in the A-Dorm, I'd be defensive too."

This statement would not appear to anybody of reasonable intelligence, to be an accusation or defamatory remark.

Another student, the antagonist, already in bad temper from previous A-Dorm publicity, confronted the victim in a hostile manner displaying all the characteristics of a stereotyped jock.

HE STUCK his chest in the victim's face, flexed his muscles and spit out a stream of four-letter words and phrases ending with threats of violence if the victim didn't stop expressing his opinion.

Soon, this jock was joined by an A-Dorm resident of much the same mentality and the two took turns making fools of themselves in front of a good-sized crowd that grew larger all the time.

NOW we come to the conclusion of the Great Debate with the appearance of a man dressed in a

WHAT we do not need is yet another reminder of K-State's darker, mechanistic side.

These impersonal, black-robed analogues of Thursdays at the sale barn should embarrass any institution which pushes the "large, but small" slogan in its recruitment literature.

And we've lost a chance to improve the situation. Plans were underway last semester to hold college commencement exercises—smaller, more personal ones—in which we may even have had our names read separately as we picked up our empty folders.

Two-thirds of the seniors questioned about the new plan approved or approved of a combination of large University and smaller college exercises.

YET the plan was scuttled. It suffocated in the flabby folds of the University administration. Certainly this new plan was not a cure-all for the complex woes of a too-large University. But the move heralded a promise of (God forbid I should use this word) "humanizing" one small part of the production sequence.

At one time, when K-State's enrollment was smaller, all-University exercises may have afforded a less demeaning culmination of undergraduate life.

BUT this is 1977 and the graduating class numbers over 3,000. An all-University graduation ceremony is simply atrociously large; its time has come and gone.

The technical problems of several small exercises (and there are some problems) could have been overcome.

The situation adds a disheartening insight to the bromide "The more things change, the more they stay the same."

blue uniform claiming some connection with the Security and Traffic Office.

This officer shouldered his way through the crowd and without full knowledge of the facts at hand, passed judgment against the man with the chalk, stating that his statements left him open for a defamation of character claim and that our victim had better stop and desist immediately.

WHAT'S worse though, was that this officer immediately took sides with one group and forced the other into submission.

Of all the stupid, idiotic and insane ways to quiet a student disturbance this was it!

Was this officer never sent through any training or did he just forget everything he learned at the police academy?

One never takes sides like that, no matter who is right or wrong.

IF ANYONE had been taking those jocks seriously that cop could have incited a small riot with his poor judgment.

In conclusion, I would like to remind everybody that this incident describes an isolated example of two less-than-intelligent athletes and should not be held characteristic of A-Dorm residents.

It was not my intent to slam the A-Dorm residents. It is my intent to show how two fools can create an image for an entire group.

As for the campus patrolman, I've run out of excuses for them.

Commission weighs class as possible DWI deterrent

BY PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan City Commission last night discussed but tabled sponsorship of an application for a project designed to increase the number of drunken driving arrests and reduce the number of alcohol-related accidents in Manhattan.

The project is part of a five-county program sponsored by the North Central Kansas Guidance Center (NCKGC) aimed at reducing alcoholism in the area.

Allen Davis, executive director of the center, told the commission funds for the program will expire in June and asked it to sponsor an $180,000 federal grant application needed to continue the program.

"Basically what we need is a sponsor for our grant," said Dennis Beitz, program director. "The program is designed to give a comprehensive approach to the problem of drinking and driving."

$19,000 of the grant will be used in Manhattan to cover additional court costs caused by an expected increase in arrests. The program will also fund training police to better detect persons suspected of driving while intoxicated.

THE MUNICIPAL court judge would be furnished with a pre-trial evaluation of the arrested driver. On the basis of the evaluation, the judge would determine whether to impose the usual jail sentence and fine or to send the driver to four two-hour sessions at a NCKGC-sponsored alcohol education school.

Beitz said a similar program in Topeka reduced the amount of alcohol-related accidents by "by 15 to 17 per cent." In 1975, he said, drunken driving was responsible for six traffic deaths and nearly 100 injuries in Riley County.

"Every 50th car on the highway has a driver who is drunk," Beitz said. "About seven per cent of the country's population are problem drinkers."

Bill Frost, city prosecuting attorney, cited two problem areas in the program. The first problem involves funding and the second concerns the emphasis placed by the police on drunken drivers.

"By implementing the program, we are saying we are giving special emphasis to a particular area of law enforcement and singling out DWIs as a major problem," Frost said.

Dinglefest players find humor in modern life

By KAY COLES

Arts and Entertainment Editor Sources such as B.F. Skinner's essays on learning, the Directory of United States Government Offices, the "how to" section of the public library and instructions on the operation of a pinball machine may not seem to provide material for humor.

At least, not to most people. But the Dinglefest Theatre from

Collegian Review

Chicago, using these sources, created an entertaining evening for the audience in McCain Auditorium last night.

The company, comprised of three men and two women, conveyed the confusion of 20th century technology in a series of skits.

The events in the life of the individual were cleverly relayed by communicating the titles of "how to" books which are the synthesis of modern life. How to live, work, wed, conceive and recreate were demonstrated through body language.

THE HIGHLIGHT of the evening was presented in a sequence titled, "Can you find it?"

Beginning with flashlights beamed around the stage, the actors asked each other if they could find it. "It" turned out to be jobs with the government which required integrity, responsibility, perseverance and rewarded the individual when he could uncover subversion against the government.

The CIA, was the seemingly obvious employer, but, as the government is wont to do, the requirements were for the job of postal clerk.

The peculiar combination of pinball machine instructions and a description of the electoral process was a thought-provoking and masterfully created skit.

The skits were skillfully prepared and delicately portrayed. The subtle satire of each situation left many audience members confused, but always laughing.

The company has developed this method of communication which they call "verbatim technique." Its originality and refreshing, if jaundiced, view of American life is indeed a welcome addition to the theatre.

Kudos to Dinglefest members, Jack Slater, Shelly Goldstein, Louis Lafikes, Denise Pickering and Tom Doman for a job well done.

People cleansed by healing, exorcism said, it is discovered the person may need an exorcism or deliverance.

Exorcism is the rite and act of casting out or conjuring out evil spirits from a possessed person, group, thing or place. There are references in both the Old and New Testaments to evil spirits and their ability to take possession of a person.

According to some, the modern term "hang-up" could be suggestive of demonic activity. They say demonic activity is not necessarily an indication that a person is actually possessed but rather "subject to Satan's influences."

THE casting out of "influences" is a deliverance.

"Jesus would much rather do things in a quiet manner," Cook said. "At an inner healing we know what kind of spirits exist—if they are evil we quietly ask them to leave in the name of Jesus, and then ask Him to come in and fill the void the spirits left. These things and events should remain confidential," Cook said.

In describing an exorcism, those interviewed often said it was "ugly." Few were willing to talk of their experiences in "casting out of demons" but those that did often reported instances of screaming, shaking, weeping, hysterically laughing, writhing, sighing or vomiting.

Duke Benndix, an employee at the Manhattan Christian Community, believes while attending college at Oregon State University he became possessed and as a result had an exorcism performed.

Benndix said he was involved with the political era of the '60s. He was a former member of the Students for a Democratic Society and in the process came to rely heavily on drugs.

K-State bicyclists subject to city fine

K-State students riding their bicycles off campus without a Manhattan bicycle license may be subject to minor fines.

The city ordinance dealing with registration calls for a fine of not more than $10, and the license can be revoked by a municipal court judge.

A two-year bike license can be purchased at city fire stations for $2.00.

The Security and Traffic Office will not sell permits this fall, said Security and Traffic Chief Paul Nelson, adding students who ride on campus only need to register their bicycles with the Security and Traffic office.

AT THAT TIME, he said, he was going through an identity crisis. He met a man who was a leader of a Christian group on the university campus.

"We had known each other for a long time, and he came out and said, 'Duke, you have demonic problems.'"

"I went to this guy's house because I knew I needed help," he said. "Right before I got there I remember I had a strong desire to take my life."

"As the people began praying for me I began to shake uncontrollably. They asked the spirits to name themselves and I remember hearing 'murder and hatred.' There were others named but I can't remember them all. After that people noticed a marked change in my personality and life."

Imperialism hurting Arab masses, says OAS lecturer

By JOCELYN SHEETS
Collegian Reporter

The Middle East Arab revolution is failing due to unclear strategy for defeating imperialism and Zionism, says Hassan El-Ashhab, lecturer and officer of the Organization of Arab Students in U.S. and Canada.

El-Ashhab, speaking Tuesday in the Union Little Theatre, said imperialism is the highest state of capitalism when the two become direct opposites. In an imperialistic state the concentration of capital, merging of bank and industry capital, export capital and division of labor are factors which bring sectionalism, he said.

THE ARAB countries are dominated by imperialism which exploits the colonized people, El-Ashhab said. He said the people must strive to establish cooperative economies and disassociate from imperialistic economies which are stunting their growth as a nation.

"Political institutions suffer and the leaders need to mobilize the masses to participate in forming their new lives," El-Ashhab said.

The professor of political science at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, said Jewish and British governments are profiting in the Middle East at the expense of the Arab people. The United Nations has always taken a pro-Western view of the Middle East conflict which has hurt the Arab masses, he said.

IN HIS TALK, he gave students background information on the Palestinian conflict. He cited two flaws in the Zionists' effort: assumption that Palestine is a virgin island without population and the idea of all Jews forming one Zionist nation. El-Ashhab said Palestine had 580,000 people in the 1800's and Jewish people from around the world don't have a common language or background.

The Zionists thought the Arab people of Palestine to be backward, undereducated and pacifistic, El-Ashhab said. The Zionists who went into Palestine established independent economic units from the Arab people, he said.

Office withholds transcripts to force payment of fines

By KIM MOORE
Collegian Reporter

It wasn't worth $46 in parking fines for one graduate, now a reporter for the Miami Herald, to obtain her college transcripts.

Students who fail to pay University fines won't go through life without a diploma, but they can't get copies of their transcripts.

"A relatively small number of students fail to take care of their obligations," said Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records. Every effort is made to collect the fines—parking and library fines, chemistry breakage fees and things of this sort. Students are notified two or three times before the transcript is withheld.

"I suppose you could get by without a transcript, but it would be rather rare," Gerritz said. "If you apply for a job and say you've got a degree from Kansas State University, the employer would want to see the transcript—what classes you took, how you did—especially if there is more than one applicant."

THE FIVE or six boxes of unpaid tickets for this year total 1,250 to 1,500 violations in "ballpark figures," said Paul Nelson, Chief of the Office of Security and Traffic.

"Lots will come in and pay before school is out. Many also come in to pay after they're notified that their records will be tabbed," Nelson said.

Many of the students with overdue fines aren't graduating. Because their registration materials are withheld until the fines are paid, many fines are paid before the next semester starts, Gerritz said.

Students that think they've been penalized with fines unfairly may take their complaint to an appeals board, Gerritz said.

"None of the penalties are designed to make money. They're assessed to manage or control. Most regulations are made for the good of the majority," Gerritz said. "For instance, how many times have you driven up to a stop sign with nobody there and you could have driven right through it? Yet, we're all conditioned to stop."

Proposed welfare revisions criticized by Kansas doctors

TOPEKA (AP)—A package of proposed revisions aimed at saving the state up to $11 million a year by cutting medical assistance to the poor drew fire Tuesday from representatives of Kansas dentists and optometrists.

The cutbacks would reduce the amount of medical assistance paid to the two groups, and to others such as psychiatrists and physicians.

ROBERT HARDER, secretary of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, explained the proposed changes at a public hearing attended by about 200 persons representing SRS and various organizations. The hearing was at Topeka State Hospital.

The proposed reductions are an attempt to hold the line on soaring medical welfare costs the state feels it can no longer afford, according to Harder.

Under the proposed changes, the state would no longer pay for eyeglasses for those over 21. And it would pay for dental care to those over 21 only to relieve pain and suffering.

Cromwell goes to Rams; drafted as defensive back

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Nolan Cromwell, who holds the single game rushing record for a college quarterback, is excited about the prospect of playing defense for the Los Angeles Rams.

The versatile University of Kansas performer, also a stand-out in track, was selected by the Rams in the second round of the profootball draft Tuesday. Los Angeles made a swap with the Seattle Seahawks to select Cromwell.

"I talked to quite a few different teams. I never picked one that I'd like to go with," said the 6-1, 195-pound Cromwell. He said it was good to be going to "an established team" with "a winning tradition."

"I'm excited to get out there and play," he said. "I just hope I can contribute."

Cromwell, who became one of the best wishbone quarterbacks at KU after two years of free safety, said it doesn't matter where the Rams put him.

Sox whip Royals

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Alan Bannister collected four hits and scored three runs and Richie Zisk belted his eighth home run of the season to lead the Chicago White Sox past the Kansas City Royals 8-4 Tuesday night.

The White Sox, who pounded four Kansas City pitchers for 12 hits, scored three runs in the eighth to put the game away.

Dave Hamilton, who entered the game in the fourth, notched his first victory.

Sports

"I'll play anywhere they want me to. I like playing the game. That's the main thing I look for, being able to contribute," he said.

Cromwell, a native of Ransom, was credited with 126 tackles as a defensive back his first two seasons. He was shifted to quarterback his junior year when

Cats sign Blackman

Rolando Blackman—the third Brooklyn basketball product in two years—has signed a national letter-of-intent with K-State.

Blackman, a 6-5, 185-pound swing man from William E. Grady Vocational High School, joins 1976 Brooklyn standouts Curtis Redding and Tyrone Ladson at K-State. He is the second 1977 K-State signee, joining Brent Murphy of Clinton, Iowa, whom the Cats announced on Monday.

Blackman gained first-team all-Brooklyn (Public School Athletic League) and was a member of the Brooklyn USA all-star team his senior year. He averaged 26.5 points, 13 rebounds and eight assists per contest, and shot 54 per cent during 1976-77.

Bud Moore became head coach of the Jayhawks. In the third game of that season—the first one Cromwell started—he rushed for 294 yards on 28 carries. That is an NCAA record.

Ricky Bell and Tony Dorsett, the nation's best collegiate running backs, were the first two draft choices. Bell was selected by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and Dorsett went to the Dallas Cowboys after they shipped four draft choices to Seattle for the Seahawks' pick.

"Rolando's combined jumping and scoring abilities make him an outstanding prospect and he should make a strong contribution to our program," said Jack Hartman, head coach.

Blackman was voted Athlete-of-the-Year at Grady during 1976-77 and was the Falcons' basketball MVP both his junior and senior years. He was an honorable mention all-city selection as a junior.

An honor roll student who plans to major in business, Blackman's high school coach Fred Moskowitz said, "Rolando is one of the finest student-athletes I've had. He's hard working, intelligent, a leader and a fine young man."

Most K-State coeds want careers

By KATHY LALLY
Collegian Reporter

Many K-State faculty members believe that many women are in college to get their MRS degrees, according to Margaret Nordin, assistant director of the Center for Student Development.

This folk wisdom was challenged, however, by a survey conducted last fall by the Center for Student Development which shows 56 per cent of this year's freshmen women said they wanted a career. A similar survey, given to freshmen women in 1973, showed that only 43 per cent wanted a career.

A GREATER acceptance of working women might account for the jump in the number of women wanting a career from 1973 to 1976.

"Far more students in '76 plan to work while in school or during the summer," Nordin said. "Thus it appears that the 1976 class is more conscious of the need for additional earnings from various members of the family."

National statistics show that 90 per cent of women will work sometime whether the reason is to supplement a husband's income, support a family or for personal enjoyment.

A recent increase of women enrolling in non-traditional curriculums—agriculture, architecture and design, engineering and business administration—shows that women are preparing themselves to assume an active career.

Although money may be a big reason for a freshman woman's decision to work, it also may be a desire to gain experience for a career.

Past K-State statistics indicate that less than 60 per cent of the 1976 freshman women will graduate with a bachelor's degree, but in the 1976 survey, 91 per cent said they planned to finish school.

"I'm not saying at all that they're dishonest, just unrealistic," Nordin said.

NORDIN believes that some women really plan to graduate, but "things happen."

"Women on the whole do not have the level of aspirations as men," Nordin said. "The prevailing attitude held by parents and students is that it's more important to educate men than women."

Changes in family plans, such as marriage, children, moving with a husband's job or working to supplement the income, are some of the "personal reasons" often cited for a woman leaving school, Nordin said.

Freshman women in both surveys agree that women and men should receive equal pay for equal work. But, there was a 15 per cent drop from 1973 in the number of women who agreed with the goals of the women's movement.

"To me, this is very discouraging. It surprised me," Nordin said. She believes it could because of an increase in the anti-women's movement sentiment.

Engineering and architecture were listed as unsuitable careers for women in one-third of the 1976 responses. In the 1973 survey, less women thought these were unsuitable careers for women.

"The general pattern indicates that sex bias regarding careers still exists among women students at K-State," Nordin said.

MORE 1976 freshmen women want to combine a marriage and family with a career than in 1973.

"We are moving more and more into a two-career family, largely out of necessity," Nordin said. "You almost need two incomes."

Although the majority of women want children, 22 per cent in 1976 said they didn't want children compared to 8 per cent in 1973. Nordin believes K-State women are following the national trend.

"I'm certainly not saying this is good or bad. I think there's been a great concern about zero population growth. And certainly the trend nationally is away from the family," she said.

Whether or not a woman wants a career depends a lot on the role of the woman's mother, according to the survey. The mother acts as a "role model" for both types of women.

Women with mothers who haven't completed high school tend to want a career 10 times more than those whose mothers finished school.

The women whose mothers didn't finish high school may better understand the importance of a college education, especially if their mothers had difficulty finding jobs or had negative attitudes toward them.

More of the 1976 women want careers, but don't necessarily want to follow patterns of either parent.

"It may be that the young women are not entirely satisfied with existing work patterns for either men or women and are searching for some changes," Nordin said.

CLERICAL work and home economics were chosen as the two most suitable careers for women by both groups of freshman.

"Since the occupation in which most working mothers were employed was clerical, this may have seemed a logical choice," Nordin said.

"Home economics at K-State is a highly professional program, so that career-oriented persons are drawn to it as well as students who think it would be nice to have since they plan to be homemakers," Nordin said. "Both are traditionally women's occupational choices."

In general, K-State freshmen women are conservative about the concepts of the women's movement. It is possible that it holds a negative connotation for them.

Most of the freshman agreed on equal work opportunities and pay for women and men, the basic concepts of the women's movement. Few women liked the idea of being drafted, but career-oriented women were more willing to assume this responsibility if it occurred.

Career-oriented women tend to agree that women are just as qualified as men to serve in leadership positions and said women are capable of dealing with the stress and pressure of academics and business.

2 K.C. high schools open despite strike

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The Kansas City School District opened two high schools Tuesday for the first time since a teachers' strike started March 21, and announced plans to open four more today.

Meanwhile, the Central Labor Council announced plans for a demonstration Friday in downtown Kansas City in support of the teachers. Labor is expected to urge the school district to resume negotiations with the teachers. Talks broke down March 31.

A spokesman said George Meany, AFL-CIO president, was expected to participate in the demonstration outside the Jackson County Courthouse, where two teachers are serving jail terms for violation of a no-strike order.

The demonstration had been planned for today, but a labor official said it was changed to Friday morning to coincide with an appearance by Meany at the AFL-CIO Union Industries Show.

Drug lights spark to Laetrile meeting

KANSAS CITY (AP) — The American Medical Association told a public hearing on Laetrile Tuesday that the substance is worthless, but a Laetrile supporter drew cheers from the partisan audience saying:

"You people in authority consider all the rest of us as a bunch of dummies."

The Laetrile supporter was Glen Rutherford, 60, of Conway Springs, Kan., a folk hero to the Laetrile proponents whose court action forced the federal Food and Drug Administration to hold the hearing.

"YOU SET yourself up as God and Jesus Christ all rolled into one," Rutherford told the hearing. "Only my creator, God, has the right to tell me how to die."

And, speaking about organized medicine's opposition to the use of Laetrile, Rutherford drew more applause and cheers by saying, "They are guilty of premeditated murder in the first degree."

Rutherford's testimony continued the emotional tone of the hearing on the legal and scientific status of the alleged anticancer substance.

LAETRILE, ALSO known as amygdalin and Vitamin B-17, has been promoted as a cancer cure for some 25 years and is now being hailed by its supporters as a cancer preventative. It is a chemical that occurs naturally in the pits of apricots, peaches and bitter almonds.

Art exhibit lesson in Indian culture

By ANTHONY SEALS
Collegian Reporter

A trip to "Sacred Circles," an Indian Art exhibit at Kansas City's Nelson Art Gallery is a learning experience for the ignorant and an aesthetic experience for the knowledgeable.

The display containing exhibits dating as far back as 200 years, erases the savage, lazy, bow and

Kansans at capital to give sales pitch

WASHINGTON (AP)—A contingent of Kansans attempting to sell the economic benefits of the Sunflower State to the outside world continued a statewide sales effort at the nation's capital Tuesday.

Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith hosted a lunch Tuesday for the chief executives of more than 200 national associations headquartered in Washington.

Ninety Kansans from the Kansas Cavalry, the governor's International Development Steering Committee and Tourism Task Force are in the capital city on the special Kansas sales pitch.

In conjunction with the effort, private Kansas citizens have made personal calls on more than 100 associations.

The drive was the first statewide convention sales effort for Kansas, according to Larry Montgomery, director of the International Development Division of the Kansas Economic Development Commission.

arrow stereotypes of the Native American Indian and puts in its place a historical and creative insight to a once flourishing culture.

SACRED Circles is a well-organized tour with guards at each turn directing traffic. Different tribal art in pipes, pottery, buffalo hides, beads work, basketry and wood, are displayed along with a small collection of art in metal and ivory.

The craftsmanship of each object reflects a patient, careful and colorful people.

Most of the Indian garments show the telling effects of time with faded colors and ragged edges, but this doesn't take away from the overall design.

MANY North American Indian tribes were heavily attuned to nature. The Athabaskan tribes showed great amounts of flower designs in their leather work.

The smoking pipes of the Ohio and Hopewell cultures, which were half the size of an average American pipe had extreme detailed carvings of various animals.

One very colorful display, was primarily of wooden masks, with hideous expressions. Perhaps their purpose was to ward off evil spirits. Whether this accounts for the lack of people around the exhibit is unknown.

The Eskimos were also skilled in the carving and made miniature detailed replicas of different types of modern hand tools.

An unexpected highlight of the tour was a group of Indian boys and girls chanting their native songs to the rhythms of a tom-tom drum in the main hall of the art gallery.

The exhibit was fascinating but incomplete. An Indian tour guide, who is sensitive to the cultural differences in today's society, should have been on hand to answer questions.

Students encounter Moon followers

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

Four members of Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church have approached K-State students on campus and in Manhattan commercial shops this week asking for donations in exchange for candy and flowers.

The members, described to be juveniles, may have broken a Manhattan city ordinance pertaining to soliciting merchandise, according to The Manhattan City Clerk's Office. The members purchased a two-day solicitation permit from the city clerk's office Tuesday, which restricted their soliciting to residential areas.

THE MEMBERS have solicited on commercial and business premises including Dairy Queen, Wal-Mart and Brothers Tavern. The violation is punishable by $100 fine and/or 10 days in jail, City Attorney Ed Horne said.

Riley County Police Inspector Raymond Peplow said he was unaware of the violations. No charges have been filed against the members.

The members may have misrepresented themselves when soliciting some students, and in some cases quoted prices for the candy instead of asking for a donation.

Kevin Brown, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said he purchased a box of candy for $1.50 from one of the members Tuesday under the impression that he was collecting money for the city.

"He said 'I'm selling candy so we can build a youth center, in Manhattan,'" Brown said. "I thought he was from the YMCA or something. If I had known he was from the Unification Church, I never would have bought it. But he never said he was from a church."

OTHER students approached by the members said they weren't informed what church the donations were being collected for.

Kay Coles, junior in journalism and mass communications, said she was stopped by one of the members in a campus parking lot Tuesday who said he represented a youth Christian organization.

"He said, 'This is your lucky day,'" Coles said. "He asked me if there was any big events on campus, (and) he wanted to know where he could find people on campus."

Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter said the members didn't violate the law by not identifying their organization.

"If the people are dumb enough to give somebody money to an organization without making a full inquiry, then I can't imagine that to be illegal," Sauter said.

He added, however, that if the money acquired by the members wasn't used for what they claimed it to be for, then a theft by deception would have been committed.

THE KANSAS leader of the Unification Church, Paul Valin, said donations collected by the members are sent to the Church's national headquarters in New York City. The money is used for cultural programs, overseas missionary programs and for educational purposes.

"This is how we support our program," Valin said.

Contrary to popular belief, Valin said, money collected for the Church isn't given to Rev. Moon.

He said the Church has "very strict fund-raising guidelines."

"There have been breaches of the law in the past," he said, without elaboration. "We definitely urge them to follow the guidelines."

Valin said the fund raisers should announce their religious affiliation when soliciting for donations. However, he attributed the members failure to volunteer that the Unification Church is beneficiary of donations to a need to "expedite matters."

"GENERALLY our members express that they're with the Unification Church," he said.

In response to members asking for donations in some cases and quoting prices for their merchandise in others, Valin said "some members feel more comfortable" asking for either donations or a set price.

VALIN said the church members generally don't attempt to convert people to the Unification Church while soliciting for donations. But he said they will put a person interested in the church in contact with one of the church's centers. The Unification Church did have such a center in Manhattan until last year.

Valin described the church's goals as "serving the Christian spirit of sacrifice."

"Our church is working to restore the basic Christian values in America," he said. "We feel that if it doesn't happen very soon, America will decline very rapidly."

Valin estimated there to be 20 to 30 Church members traveling the state at any given time collecting donations. He said members travel in teams from city to city, staying no more than a few days in each place.

Nixon admits he 'let down country'

WASHINGTON (AP)—Richard Nixon broke his long silence on Watergate Wednesday night, conceding "I let down my friends, I let down the country, I let down our system of government."

But, 1,000 days after he resigned in disgrace over the Watergate scandal, the former president insisted he did not obstruct justice. "I did not commit, in my view, an impeachable offense," he declared.

HIS EYES glistening at times during the climactic minutes of a paid-for interview with British television personality David Frost, Nixon admitted he lied in some of his public statements while in office.

And Nixon said he considered resigning in April 1973—15 months before he did so, but he said he remained in office to insure his foreign policy momentum would continue.

Nixon said friends have suggested that there was a conspiracy to oust him but "I don't go with the idea."

"I brought myself down," said the 37th president, the first to resign the office. "I gave 'em a sword and they stuck it in and they twisted it with relish."

He added: "I guess if I'd been in their position, I'd have done the same thing."

THE FORMER president was alternately combative, hesitant, contrite and somber. He smiled only infrequently, in the tense manner so familiar to Americans during his aborted tenure.

Nixon spoke without notes, proudly pointing out once that he was relying only on memory for events and conversations that took place nearly five years ago. His recall has been sharpened, however, by work on his memoirs, due for publication next April.

Only when acknowledging "my political life is over" did Nixon's voice crack slightly.

"I said things that were not true," he told Frost, but he said that didn't apply to the "big issues" of the scandal.

AGAIN, as he did all through the heat of Watergate, Nixon maintained he was not involved in the break-in at Democratic headquarters at the Watergate on June 17, 1972. And he denied that he had participated in or approved the payment of hush money to the burglars.

That is exactly what he said when he was trying to save his embattled presidency in the face of impeachment resolutions just before he resigned. Of the hush money payments, Nixon said: "It's possible it's a mistake that I didn't stop it."

"It was so botched up," he said of the way Watergate was handled by his administration. "I made so many bad judgments; the worst ones, mistakes of the heart, rather than the head."

Economy cars: styling, comfort not left out in battle against rising costs

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three-part series comparing economy cars. Today's article compares comfort and styling.

By RONN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

With rising car prices and diminishing energy reserves, many people are turning to the small, economical car for transportation.

This series evaluates seven economy cars—the Toyota Corolla, Datsun B-210, Chevrolet Vega, Ford Pinto, Subaru, Honda Civic and Volkswagen Rabbit. The tests were conducted on a 50-mile test loop around Manhattan and included both in-town and highway driving. Today's article evaluates the comfort and styling of the cars.

—TOYOTA COROLLA— Dubbed "The Answer" by Toyota's marketing people, the Corolla Sedan may be the answer for those who want a car for basic, cheap transportation.

With a sticker price of $3,257.25, the test Corolla had three options—a rear window defogger, weather guard package and an AM radio.

From the outside, Corolla's styling is pleasant, though rather plain, lacking much of the chrome trim found on more expensive Corollas. Fit and finish is good, with body panels fitting together well.

The effects of cost-cutting are more obvious on the interior, however. Most obvious is the lack of carpeting, being replaced by a cushioned rubber floor covering. Also absent are arm rests and a day-night mirror.

Visibility is a strong point of the Corolla, as is front seat comfort. Ventilation is good, even with the fan turned off.

Luggage space is adequate but with no side padding or inner panels, cargo could slide into the side of the compartment, possibly leaving a dent in the outside sheetmetal.

—DATSUN B-210— At a sticker price of $3,799, the B-210 is Datsun's answer to economical transportation.

The B-210's interior is generally well done, with full carpeting and reclining front bucket seats. Front seat comfort is good, although the seats could use a little more support. Fit and finish is good.

Outward visibility is also good, with only minor blind spots at the quarter panels.

Luggage space is similar to the Toyota—small by big-car standards, but adequate for overnight bags and small luggage.

—CHEVROLET VEGA— For those who prefer domestic cars, Chevrolet offers the Vega. The test car was a red hatchback, with a sticker price of $3,717.75.

The hatchback styling is attractive and exterior finish is generally good. Outward visibility is also good, with no blind spots or vision obstructions.

The interior of the Vega is an exercise in the use of plastic. Door panels, dash and interior trim are all molded plastic, and while the fit is good, it is not attractive. The carpeting is nice and well coordinated.

Front seat comfort is average, with ample head and leg room. Adjustable seat backs, as are found in many of the Vega's foreign competitors, would be a welcome replacement for the Vega's standard fixed seat backs.

With the rear seat folded down, the hatchback provides 26.5 cubic feet of cargo area, but the fast-back styling often interferes with bulky objects.

As for ventilation, two under-dash vents provide excellent air flow both in town and on the road.

—FORD PINTO— Another domestic entry in the small-car market is the Ford Pinto. At $3,696, the three-door Runabout tested had radial tires as its only option.

With the exception of the new shovel-nosed, Chevy-like front end, the Pinto is of the same design as when introduced in 1971. Exterior finish is good, as is outward visibility, with only small blind spots at the rear quarter panels.

The Pinto's interior is attractively outfitted, with full carpeting and vinyl door panels. Seats in the test car were standard vinyl with cloth insets—a welcome change from the all-vinyl seats of the other test cars. Front seats are comfortable and give good support.

An exception to the otherwise attractive interior is the skinny, two-spoke steering wheel which is both unattractive and uncomfortable to use.

Interior finish is good. The Pinto seems to be the quietest car tested, both in town and on the highway.

The Pinto receives high marks in cargo space, offering 29 cubic feet of space with the rear seat folded down.

—SUBARU— "Inexpensive and built to stay that way," is Subaru's slogan for its economy cars. The test car, a white, front wheel drive, two-door sedan, had a sticker price of $3,318. The car had no options, but standard equipment included radial tires, hinged rear windows and reclining front seats.

With the exception of a small area of chrome plating beginning to peel from the rear bumper of the test car, fit and finish is good.

The interior of the Subaru is plain, with carpeting only over the transmission hump. Rubber mats replace carpeting on both front and rear floorboards. The dash is an all-black plastic affair with a skinny black steering wheel, neither of which are attractive. Finish and outward visibility are good.

Front seats are comfortable, with adequate support and adjustable backs.

Trunk space is on par with the Toyota and Datsun, with enough room for overnight bags and small luggage.

—HONDA CIVIC— With tough new energy legislation in the making, Honda's slogan that its cars are "what the world is coming to" may indeed come true. Utilizing boxy, yet practical styling, the Civic CVCC hatchback tested had a sticker price of $3,290, the least expensive car tested. The car had no options, but reclining front seats, tinted glass, full carpeting and an AM radio were standard equipment.

The interior of the Civic is attractive, with good fit and finish. Least attractive is the carpeting, which is tightly woven and resembles a mat.

An impressive point is that Honda uses little plastic in the Civic's interior, with the exception of the dash. Also impressive is outward visibility, which is nearly free of blind spots.

Front seat comfort in the Civic is good, with good support and adjustable seat backs. Leg room may be slightly inadequate for those over six feet tall, and the front wheel wells protrude into the passenger compartment, lessening front leg room.

—VOLKSWAGEN RABBIT—

At $4,458, the yellow test car was the most expensive of the cars tested and the only car with automatic transmission. Leatherette interior, tinted glass and a performance package were also options on the test car.

The Rabbit's boxy styling provides good interior head room for both front and rear seat passengers. The reclining front seats are comfortable and even the back seat provides a fair amount of comfort for most adults. The styling also provides good outward visibility. With the rear seat down, the Rabbit has 19.4 cubic feet of cargo space. Interior fit and finish is good.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Numerous tornadoes, spawned by a severe thunderstorm system, swept through northeast Kansas Wednesday evening, causing scattered damage and resulting in at least one missing person.

There were preliminary reports of between 10 and 15 funnel touchdowns in Johnson County as the storm system rolled into the Kansas City area about 7:30 p.m.

Most damage was limited to the southern, primarily rural, part of the county. Three houses were damaged between Olathe and Gardner and two others south of there.

Earlier in the evening, a funnel touched down south of Lawrence in Douglas County, damaging two structures and injuring one person.

The twister reportedly destroyed a barn in Pleasant Grove, then hit a house east of Lone Star, causing undetermined injury to a resident.

CHICAGO—The nation's Roman Catholic bishops voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to repeal a century-old church law excommunicating Catholics who have divorced and remarried.

The bishops voted 231-8 to revoke the excommunications decree of the Third Council of Baltimore in 1884, a penalty applied only to American Catholics.

Revoking it still requires confirmation of the Pope, but this was considered almost a foregone conclusion since the edict involved only this country.

Estimates put the number of divorced, remarried Catholics in the United States at about five million.

TOPEKA—A planned merger of the Kansas Power and Light Co. with Central Kansas Power Co. has been called off, KPL President William Wall announced Wednesday.

Central Kansas Power, a subsidiary of United Telecommunications Inc., operates electric and gas systems in northwest Kansas.

"Conditions have so changed since we entered into the merger agreement, over two years ago, that the board of directors has decided to exercise our right to terminate that agreement," Wall said in a statement.

WASHINGTON—President Carter's secretaries of state and defense told Congress on Wednesday that the United States faces serious military and diplomatic problems unless it quickly reduces its reliance on Middle Eastern oil.

Earlier, President Carter told members of Congress at the White House that his energy package includes 113 legislative proposals and that he expects Congress to share the heat with him on the unpopular sections.

The President defended his proposed tax on gasoline and said the American people want to make a patriotic effort to help the United States out of its energy problems.

Carter also said he believes his proposals will cause less sweeping hardship and criticism than he had first anticipated.

TOPEKA—The Democratic leadership of the Kansas House promised and delivered a progressive yet fiscally responsible session, House Speaker John Carlin (D-Smolton) said Wednesday.

The result, Carlin said, makes it appear that Gov. Robert Bennett's "annual paranoia of legislative overspending has been cured."

"Figures released this afternoon show that for fiscal year 1978, the legislature spent less than the governor recommended by $400,000."

Carlin contrasted the 1977 session, the first in 64 years where Democrats controlled the House, with the 1975 and 1976 sessions where Republicans were in control of both legislative branches.

Nixon confession should be 'free'

A $600,000 confession was aired last night when former President Richard Nixon went on television to answer questions about his role in the Watergate scandal.

ACCORDING to news accounts published before the telecast, Nixon views the interviews as a way to publicly cleanse himself of the sins of Watergate, thus ending his three-year exile.

Had Nixon bared his soul without being paid $600,000 to do it, Americans could view it as Nixon's method of making amends.

As it is, Nixon confessing on national television for such a sum of money is repugnant.

Telling the truth about Watergate is a debt Nixon has owed Americans since he resigned in 1974.

DURING his term, Nixon needlessly caused an internal crisis upon America, by abusing the power of his office.

By abusing his power, he betrayed the American people and brought about his downfall.

Last night, he admitted he had "let the country down."

This admission will not restore him to his former place of respect, but it will help smooth the scars Watergate left upon the nation.

The salve Nixon is trying to smooth on the scars is tainted with the money he demanded to do the interviews.

THE EXPLANATIONS he offers and his willingness to answer questions about Watergate have long been due the American people.

But Nixon should not be paid for telling Americans the truth. It's something he's owed the people since 1972.

Spanking: A heavy hand

"Hello."

"Why haven't you press guys done anything about this?" the young voice on the phone asked.

"About what?"

"It's a classic case of the establishment gone berserk with power. It'll make you famous. You'll become another Mike Andros."

"Mike who? What will?"

"Don't you newspapermen know anything? I was spanked so hard today in school I lost three teeth. Three teeth, besides that a friend of mine couldn't, well, you know, for a whole week. It took a gallon of prune juice to get him going again."

"Gallon of what?"

"PRUNE JUICE, and I'm innocent. The teacher claimed I was eating candy in class and I wasn't."

"What were you doing?"

"Nothing, I told you I was framed and even if I was that's no reason for a teacher to beat the crap out of me. I had no trial, I had no lawyer and I wasn't even read my rights."

"Your rights!"

"My rights! You sure are dumb. I was a victim of cruel and unusual punishment. You know the Eighth Amendment. I'll read it, excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

"YOU SEEM to be pretty smart for such a young kid, what do you want me for?"

"I need press coverage. I'm going to take it to the Supreme Court. You do know what that is don't you?" he said.

"Yes, but you're too late," I told the smart aleck. "The Supreme Court already ruled that spanking by teachers in schools does not violate the Constitution and the Eighth Amendment only deals with prisoners."

"You mean?"

"That's right. Teachers who were afraid to swat disobedient students because of law suits can now dust off their wooden paddles and do it with the blessing of the Supreme Court," I said.

"BUT WHAT about my rights as a U. S. citizen?"

"What rights?" I said. Later, I realized this is not a subject to be taken lightly, after all, it deserved the attention of the Supreme Court.

We all grew up fearing the consequences of the paddle hanging in the schoolroom, but maybe now is the time to look at spanking seriously.

Does it really prevent disobedience?

In my junior high the kids had contests to see who could sign the paddle the most times before they went to high school. Others would rather have a swat than do other forms of punishment.

It's too bad the Supreme Court didn't do away with spanking when it had the chance, with its 5-4 decision it won't be long before it reviews the matter again.

Victim of 'Lafene lapse'

Editor,

I can easily sympathize with members of Kappa Kappa Gamma, who after initially being treated for flu by Lafene physicians were finally all found to have food poisoning. Yes, I too was a victim of a "Lafene Lapse."

After being diagnosed by a Lafene doctor as having "the start of an ulcer," I took antacid for a week while living with a ruptured appendix. Needless to say, the remedy did not improve the condition of my "ulcer."

I WENT home the next weekend, received a proper diagnosis from my family doctor and then had the necessary surgery. Now I am on my way to complete recovery.

For some strange reason though, I feel amazed that I'm still here to write about it. I've always thought that death is a disease that doesn't keep on giving. I would have gladly paid a few more measly dollars and spent additional time for the necessary lab tests to give the doctor more evidence on which to base his judgment.

Health fees at Lafene will increase another $5 for the fall semester. The question is, will we receive the benefits of it?

Students praised

Editor,

During the past four years, I have walked on the K-State campus daily and have been privileged to talk with many students.

I want to "lay on you" a few words of praise and positive conclusions I have reached.

ALL THE students with whom I have talked, have shown the highest respect, the clearest thinking and the most concern for humanity that I have ever observed.

I have encouraged a few who found rough going and I trust they stayed on.

I pick up litter as I walk and place it where it belongs. A lad got off his bicycle to thank me for helping the looks of the campus.

LAST Friday, a small lad and I were in the "hide-out" and we asked Ron and Sharon to join us. We had a real picnic as we talked of the positive, good things of college life.

My age says I belong to the Geritol bunch, but not my spirit. Power to you young people!

Letters to the editor

Ahearn alternate site

Editor,

This is an open letter to students, future students, administrators and alumni concerned with: the student recreation complex, physical education program, athletic program, dreams of a new fieldhouse, long-range planning of the campus and getting the most for our dollar.

THE STUDENT recreation complex has been discussed on the campus and at a state level for perhaps a year and a half. The students and others are to be commended for the commitment of money and time they have made to the project.

The Long-Range Planning Committee met Monday and reviewed four sites for the recreation complex in the vicinity of the old stadium.

Discussion ranged from: rejecting all of these sites, recommending the one south of the old stadium, reconsidering a site near the K-State Athletic Residence Hall, considering a site in West Stadium parking lot and to a suggestion that perhaps Ahearn Field House could be used for the recreation complex.

THE LATTER one involves a major delay of perhaps five years at the minimum in completing the recreation complex, however, the advantages to everyone are worth considering and may outweigh the time delay.

This alternative is suggested, assuming Ahearn could be converted for perhaps one-half of the $3 million to $3.5 million cost of a new building to house the recreation complex and perhaps with more space.

The $1.75 million or so left over would be pledged to the construction of a new fieldhouse near the stadium. A figure of $8 million to $10 million was suggested as a probable cost of a new fieldhouse; so the amount left over from the recreation complex referendum would represent approximately 20 per cent of its cost based on the assumptions given.

A pledge of this amount from students would have to be taken as a serious commitment to a fieldhouse and the remainder would surely be provided by other sources.

IT APPEARS a final decision of sites for the recreation complex will be made at a meeting of the Long-Range Planning Committee on Monday.

If the suggestion of Ahearn interests you (students, this means a disadvantage of a major delay for your program but advantages of possibly more space, an ideal location, and a chance to get the ball rolling on a new fieldhouse) students should notify a member of Student Senate as this would involve a reconsideration of the referendum.

Bikers careless

Editor,

I feel my well-being and possibly my life are in danger and the situation is getting worse as each day goes by. I am referring to the "10-speed crazies" who are invading the sidewalks of campus.

NOW, I realize that they have every right to be there and most of them are quite careful and courteous. But there are also a certain number of maniacs, who assume a racing crouch and whiz between classes with teeth clenched and chins touching the handlebars.

This is most evident in the area between McCain Auditorium and Calvin Hall and on the "downhill run" south of McCain.

As I must cross this treacherous no-man's land every day on my way to class, I have had several near-misses with careening 10-speeds.

THE TERRIFYING part of it is, you don't hear them coming...the eerie buzz of the coasting mechanism reaches your nerve center the split-second before the bike blasts on past.

Since the human instinct is to jump out of the way, one of these times someone is going to jump the wrong way and it'll be law suit time, baby.

All I want is a fair chance to survive the semester. I don't know what the speed limit on a sidewalk is, but could you slow it down just a bit, people?

A bike crash may hurt you a lot more than it will hurt me.

Poster rules violated

Editor,

Re: Ron Fent's letter about the removal of publicity posters for the K-State Players production of "Lysistrata."

The posters for the promotion of the production "Lysistrata" removed by Alpha Phi Omega were removed because of violations of the poster and notice regulations.

IF YOU will notice, those not in violation were not removed. Some of the posters were not approved through the activities center, some of the posters were placed over other posters and several other violations occurred.

When some of the posters were approved, it was required to sign a form for approval and it included a statement that the poster regulations were read and understood.

When you took the privilege of using the poster boards you also took the responsibility not to violate the rules governing the use of them.

THE MEMBERS of Alpha Phi Omega spend many volunteer hours to maintain the poster boards and don't enjoy cleaning up all these violations.

You speak of rights Fent, it's not your right to violate these rules and infringe upon other peoples' rights by covering up someone else's posters. It was not your rights that were violated but the rights of others.

I DON'T know what the content of the play is and it doesn't make any difference as long as the poster and notice rules are not violated.

So, Fent, you had better forever hold your own peace or else next time find out what the situation is before you say anything.

Soaps worthwhile

Editor,

We are appalled by the questionable treatment of certain topics by your newspaper.

We refer specifically to the article published earlier this year concerning daytime serials. You approached the topic in a very derogatory manner. The article implied, as did the cartoon, that soap operas dealt predominantly with trite matters and with unrealistic problems.

SOAPS are useful as they give some insight to problems in everyday life. We strongly feel that they have helped us in understanding the difficulties that confront our spouses, as well as our colleagues.

Soaps also contribute to the advancement of women's status in society. More and more, soaps are portraying women, not only as housewives, but as college students, teachers, nurses, and doctors. Most of the women who are housewives also have part-time employment in bookstores, etc.

Still not convinced? Well, talk to the New York Nets: they claim to watch more soap operas than the average housewife!

Police bored?

Editor,

"A woman's getting mugged
in the heart of town,
She yells for a cop but there's none around They're out on the highway setting a trap Waiting for a bicyclist to skin the rat."

Maybe the lyrics to this song are an exaggeration, but when I was issued a summons for "driving" a bicycle without current registration, I couldn't help but wonder if cops around Manhattan are getting bored with their jobs. Maybe we need a few more robberies, rapings and murders to keep them off the backs of innocent people.

When I asked the officer why he was wasting his time, he said "the Chief" told him to do it. He also informed me of the growing number of bike accidents, most of which were the "bicyclists fault."

PERHAPS SOMEONE can tell me how registering a bicycle will prevent accidents from happening. Sure, its cheap (and worthless) insurance against theft and it funds the bikeway proposals, but what else does it do?

The summons is no joke and the fine is $10. I feel like a criminal. Manhattan bicyclists beware!

Canoers—keep it clean

Editor,

Well, so much for another K-State-University of Kansas canoe race. Back at home now, there's time to rest my aching muscles and weary bones, ahhh total relaxation. And a good night's sleep with no more nightmares about sandbars and broken paddles.

But darn it, there's that nagging concern that this could well be the last canoe race. And all because of a few careless inconsiderate slob.

Yesterday when I stopped back at the St. Mary's bridge to get my car I found enough cups and bottles and cans along the road to fill a large trash bag. That's mighty poor public relations folks. And the trampled crops, frightened livestock, open gates and littered fields along the river don't help much either. ("I'm sorry, it won't happen again," doesn't amount to a hill of beans when the bill comes in for a new tractor tire.) It only takes one person to ruin it for us all.

COMMON SIMPLE courtesy will go a long way to build good relations with the property owners along the river. (Or anyone else for that matter.)

In nine races since 1971 I've only once been refused access to the river by a landowner when I'd asked permission first.

Several times farmers have pointed out (or shown us) easier access points and I can recall one elderly man who came down to the river to cheer us on while his wife fixed iced tea back at the house.

I guess it all boils down to plain old respect. Respect to other people and respect to the land. It's really quite simple to give and it doesn't cost anything or hurt. But then if you don't give any out, don't expect any in return.

Please, next time you head out into the country, be it some farmers "back 40" or the Colorado Rockies remember to respect the land owner as well as ol' Mother Earth.

Let's keep it beautiful and free.

Mistaken identity

Editor,

I would first like to congratulate the organizers of the Doobie Brothers concert on a job well done. The concert Saturday was well worth the several hours spent in the ticket line.

HOWEVER I think the Collegian's coverage of the event left something to be desired. I have a question for Kay Coles: if that was John Hartman pictured playing guitar on Monday's front page, then why did Pat Simmons introduce him as Jeff "Skunk" Baxter?

More important, if Hartman was on guitar, who was that guy playing drums behind him?

Before a journalist decides to editorialize on the front page he or she should be quite sure of his or her facts.

ANY teeny-bopper worth her weight in bubble gum should know the difference between a guitarist and drummer, especially when they play for the Doobie Brothers.

The Collegian has forever lost its credibility in the music area, if it had any before the concert.

'Shepherds' receive criticism

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the final part of a four-part series on the charismatic-pentecostals in the midwestern United States.

By BECCY TANNER
Staff Writer

Louis Kaup is the organizer and leader of the Manhattan Christian Community (MCC) and "Shepherd" of more than 250 charismatic Manhattan residents.

Within the charismatic movement, there is a division involving the "shepherding" concept. Critics say shepherding creates tightly knit and strongly disciplined communities. Some say the leaders abuse their positions by demanding total psychological submission of followers.

Leaders who oppose "disciplining" say those being disciplined must consult with their shepherds about personal decisions. In some cases, shepherds forbid marriages, reject school and vocational plans and demand confession of sins.

KAUP SAID in the past he has received criticism for his shepherding.

"We've gotten heat from lots of people, mainly clergy and people outside of the shepherding," Kaup said. "But I believe, if you are helping people you are bound to get criticized. I am human, I have never thought my self infallible."

"I do not believe a layman can be a shepherd," said Bob Harrison, an evangelist who formerly crusaded with Billy Graham. "A shepherd must lead, protect and feed his sheep—the sheep being laymen."

"The shepherd must have solid ministerial leadership and training," he said. "It is at school where a man learns the problems he will come across with a flock. He learns how to handle them."

According to Harrison, the shepherding movement represents an "extreme side of the charismatic movement." It teaches people dependence.

"What happens when the shepherd dies? What will the flock do? These people rely too heavily on just one person."

"I have a strong suspicion that the people would listen to any man's authority before the word of God," Harrison said.

THE STRENGTH of shepherding, Harrison said, lies within the leader's ability to take parts of the Bible out of context, creating a private interpretation of the scriptures.

Melton Hubbard, associate pastor at the First Assembly of God church, agrees with Harrison.

"Like almost everything that meets the needs of people, the shepherding movement was good in its beginning," Hubbard said.

"A leader will take new Christians and teach them about submission and discipleship," he said. "But at the same time, the shepherding movement takes that leader and places him in almost the same position as Jesus Christ."

Kaup admits some mistakes, but said these are isolated and do not represent the mainstream of the MCC.

"I don't give people orders," he said. "There have been cases in which people have asked me to help them and I do—but it is only with their permission."

Kaup cited an example in which a couple in his flock was going into debt at the rate of $400 a month.

"I could see they were in trouble," he said. "As their shepherd I thought they needed help. I asked them if they needed my help. They did. I told them I wanted them to tear up all of their credit cards and I would oversee their budget for one month."

"I then loaned them $600 to get them on their feet. They have paid back all of their debts and are still a part of our fellowship. I can't describe the change in them."

IT WAS in October of 1968 that the Kaups began meeting with three other couples, calling themselves the "Friday Night Group."

According to Kaup, the group disbanded briefly in 1970, but reorganized itself, this time agreeing not to have any clergy as a part of its membership because, "they tended to scare off people and influence the tone of the meeting."

"We became interested in finding out why there was so much turnover in the group," Kaup said. "As leaders we began to feel the people had no sense of commitment. So, we began emphasizing the family as the central body of Christ."

MCC has now changed, Kaup said, to where "the Kingdom of God is brought to real life."

Part of the teachings Kaup presents to followers is:

"Our existing wills are frequently the cause of separation from God and his ways and therefore must be put to death."

"Sacrifice is symbolic of one's willingness to die if necessary in order to remain faithful—die to our old desires and actions."

The responsibility, he said, in any relationship is realizing a person must remain obedient to the people in authority.

KAUP SAID it is possible for people to bring other people closer "to the Lord."

"If I am kind to you, does this mean I have an allegiance to you?" he asked. "Have I sold myself out to journalism just because I have an interview with you? Look at the relationships. If your walk with the shepherd has deepened your relationship with the Lord, then it has been good."

Those who have participated in Kaup's group generally like it.

"There has been some criticism leveled at the shepherding movement," said Gene Schneider, vice president of the Manhattan chapter of the Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship. "But most of the criticism has come from the outside—it concentrates entirely on the negative."

Although Schneider is no longer in MCC discipleship, he said shepherding encourages people to come under the discipline of Christ.

Don Jorgenson, former member of MCC, left the group partially because "of lack of confidence in the leadership at MCC and because of a vision of what the Lord wanted me to do."

Jorgenson developed a home for college-aged people, trying to bring "the Kingdom of God to them."

"Our goal is to take people in, teach them how to take care of themselves and then boot them out," he said. "We don't want them to become dependent on us."

Juvenile slips out on court hearing

A 16-year-old juvenile, who was being held for questioning about various break-ins in Manhattan, escaped from the Riley County Courthouse Wednesday afternoon and was free for about 20 minutes before being caught by Riley County Police officers.

He was scheduled to appear before the county juvenile court when "he just slipped out the back door," according to police.

The boy was arrested Monday along with another 16-year-old and a 19-year-old man for going the wrong way on a one-way street. They were later questioned about as many as 27 break-ins in and around Manhattan and Ogden. All of the break-ins involved pilfering vending machines at restaurants or taverns.

He escaped at about 4 p.m. Wednesday and several police began searching for him before he was apprehended downtown.

Off-campus housing director to resign after year's work

By TERRY BRUNGARDT
Collegian Reporter

After a year of services, Doug deMahy, the off-campus housing director, will resign his post. Carla Fears, who is now training for the job, will take over August 1.

DeMahy is going to Texas A and M in College Station for an internship at the counseling center.

DeMAHY said as director he achieved much of the work he wanted to do. However, there were some disappointments attached to his job, he said.

"A form of disappointment for me was that students were and still are living in substandard apartments and are not reporting them to us," he said. "I don't think enough students know about the services we offer them. I can't figure out why else they weren't reporting poor living conditions."

One of deMahy's jobs was to inspect apartments and see if they were up to the University's and city's standards. He would check for such things as poor water systems, electric wiring, and cockroaches and rats.

DeMahy believes it is the student's responsibility to report poor apartment conditions.

"When a student complains we will respond. I don't think we should solicit our services by going out and trying to urge students living in substandard apartments to complain about it," he said. "I think they should take that responsibility on themselves."

AS DIRECTOR, deMahy has initiated some new services. He made up an inspection list for students to fill out when they move into apartments and compiled a new list of apartments and rates for this year.

Fears, who will graduate in Home Economics in May, plans to provide the same type of services to the students as before. She would like to maintain good relations between the community and students.

This is Fear's first experience with this kind of job, but she said she is confident she can do the job.

"I plan on reviewing some of the old cases from the past and see if I can come up with something new that I can do to help the students," she said. "I haven't been here long enough to know exactly what I will do next year."

THE SUMMER housing selection looks good, deMahy said. But he doesn't know exactly what it will be like in the fall. It will depend on how many soldiers move to the new housing in Fort Riley, he said.

Sandstrom's spouse charged with premeditated murder

TOPEKA (AP)—The Shawnee County district attorney charged Wednesday that Milda Sandstrom "maliciously, deliberately and premeditatedly" murdered her husband, Topeka broadcast executive Thad Sandstrom, in the estranged couple's home here early Tuesday.

Mrs. Sandstrom, 53, was named defendant in a one-count charge of first-degree murder filed by Dist. Atty. Gene Olander, who personally investigated circumstances of Sandstrom's death and drafted the charge without awaiting detectives' reports.

Sandstrom, 51, was found with two gunshot wounds in the back of his head in a first floor bedroom of the northwest Topeka home about 4:30 a.m. Tuesday. Mrs. Sandstrom lay beside him, apparently unconscious from taking some pills, and with a .32 caliber revolver near her hand.

Olander termed it a murder and attempted suicide. He declined comment whether a suicide note was found.

Senate expected to approve motion for A-credit-no credit

A resolution asking Faculty Senate to adopt an A-credit-no credit system probably will be approved tonight by Student Senate at its last meeting of the semester, according to Cindy Thomas, senate chairman.

Thomas said although she thought Student Senate would approve the resolution, she did not know whether Faculty Senate would approve the system, which would give a student A-credit for A-work in credit-no credit classes.

If passed by Student Senate, the resolution would go to Faculty Senate's Academic Affairs Committee. Committee chairman Carol Franq said she has heard no opposition to the system.

"We've heard about this before and opinions are favorable," Franq said. "What little comment there has been has been favorable."

The proposal, if cleared by committee, would then go to Faculty Senate. Franq said she did not know how the body would vote.

Bar games: a place to have fun, get gross (and take your mother?)

By JOLENE HOSS
Collegian Reporter

If you have the ability to "deep throat" a banana or carry a cherry between your cheeks, you've got the credentials to have a great night of free beer and fun in Aggieville games and contests. But what is really going on?

The give-aways promoted by Aggie bars to attract student crowds involve more than just free beer and popcorn.

"Every bar has a certain atmosphere they strive for," said Mike McKenney, manager of Mother's Worry. "A contest itself is a change. It's geared to the purpose of getting kids in."

Mother's Worry used to play a "Don't Loose Your Cherry Contest" which involved couples running around the dance floor with a cherry between their cheeks (facial).

"The purpose of the game was so the boys and girls could meet and interact. They (the games) have gotten old now, people didn't like them because they were getting old," McKenney said.

ONLY THE name of the game referred to sex, he said, and that was to get the customers' attention.

"We used it to get people to listen so we could explain the game," he said. "The purpose was to have group interaction—people want to meet other people. There are guys and girls still dating this semester who met in the contests."

Aggieville games offer a variety from the regular disco scene, said Greg Barnes, disc jockey at Dark Horse. "We are starting to catch a lot of people who are tired of 100 per cent disco," he said.

Special Effects

"The games are suggestive but they are not dirty and they are not gross either, they are for fun," Barnes said.

Monday nights at Dark Horse offer more than the advertised bingo game. The night also includes competition between the sexes or between couples.

The "Banana Race" and "Big Blow" contests are played along with the Monday night bingo. Prophylactics are used in the "Big Blow" contest to see which contestant can blow his condom up the biggest without breaking it.

THE "LAST CHANCE Pizza Mill Run" was another game played, but was stopped because of the way in which it was being done. The game consisted of two people sharing one pair of jeans in a three-legged race. The one leg not in the jeans was exposed along with everything else.

Mark Garten, a participant in the game, found that the race was more exciting than expected when he was followed into the bar by a police officer after completing the run.

"It was kind of a weird deal," he said. "We were in the john trying to put our jeans on when this policeman came in and asked us if we wanted to be arrested. He gave us a lecture about insulting some little old lady that was driving down the street. He seemed to be pretty upset at first but he cooled down. It was just a warning type deal."

Don Ramey, owner and manager of Dark Horse, said the game was discontinued to protect the customers.

"The police officer didn't even say anything to us, he just warned the people involved," Ramey said. "We didn't want to get the customers in trouble."

ANOTHER GAME that has been discontinued in Dark Horse is the "Moon Run." Participants would run over to a neighboring bar and moon on the dance floor. The first person to come back after exposing their buttocks at the bar was awarded free beer.

"It was good for a one time deal, but the management did not know it was going on," Ramey said.

Mike Kuhn, manager of Mr. K's, felt that the game was getting old and was tired of seeing people from Dark Horse come in and moon every Monday night.

"If they want to do that type of thing in their establishment that's fine. It was downgrading to our business," he said.

Kuhn said the game offended his customers and was bad for Aggieville.

"Guys with dates didn't appreciate the game. I think it (the game) is a wrong type image being projected by Aggieville," Kuhn said.

"I think some of the games make people mad," Ramey said, "they offend some of them right off the bat, but then they think about them and find that they are humorous."

Most bars play some type of game to get people in, Ramey said. The games are part of a spring promotion to keep a steady flow of people in the bars.

"Some of the bars are getting carried away with the game bit, though. Aggieville is going to look like a circus by next year," he said.

LARRY Woodyard, inspector for criminal investigation at the Riley County Police Department, said there has been no record of any action taken against an Aggie bar because of its games or contests.

"I am unaware of any outside public complaint or an official taking verbal action," Woodyard said. "We've not been made aware that they (the games) are causing a problem."

Woodyard said it would be hard to press obscenity charges against the businesses, because management would have to be proven responsible for the actions of its customers.

"One problem there is, is to define what is obscene and then you would have trouble proving the responsibility of the manager," he said.

Bars and bar owners must meet city requirements to be acceptable within the community, Woodyard said. The requirements pertain to the condition of the building, zoning requirements and the background of the owner applicant. Bars must also enforce rules prohibiting drunk and disorderly conduct by customers. The city commission could withhold bar licenses if bars don't meet these requirements.

JIM HOOVER, a graduate of K-State and owner of Hoov's in Aggieville, wanted his bar to be "different" from other bars.

"When I went here to K-State every Wednesday was the same damn thing. I had to do something different, I wanted to be unique," Hoover said.

"Aggie isn't as rowdy as it used to be. You go anywhere and it is boring," he said.

Games at Hoov's include 'Best Bottom' night in which contestants are judged on the firmness, flexibility, spread and showmanship of their bottoms. Judges are volunteers from the audience.

Mooning is not uncommon as the contestants, both male and female, vie for the $50 prize.

"When you see someone moon it's funny, but not really a turn on," Hoover said.

Hoover describes his games as "different and kinky" but not bad.

"Everything in the whole world revolves around sex. Look at the play on campus (Lysistrata, an ancient Greek play in which the women deny men sex to stop a war). Everybody has a little kink in them. I bring a little of the kink out in people," he said.

NEW CONTESTS are added to keep the customers coming in, Hoover said. A "Dirty Song" night, "Dirty Story" night and "Wet Frank" night are some of the games.

"It (Hoov's) is an outlet for grossness. People can come down here and be gross and be accepted. It's also a place where you can bring your mother and have a good time," he said.

"I bring a little of the kink out in people."

Hoov's has never had problems with people getting too rowdy, Hoover said.

"We've never had a fight in here and we never let the girls get harassed unless they want something. There's nothing to be afraid of by coming in here," he said.

A few bar managers and owners in Aggie said they have found they don't need to rely on games to attract customers.

"We (at K's) try to come up with ideas that will create fun and enjoyment for those who want to be in them and for those who just want to watch," Kuhn said.

A WEEKLY radio show is part of Mr. K's program. The theme of the show changes every week. Other activities include dressing up for Halloween and having Easter egg hunts, he said.

"It's a clean type of fun and they (customers) really enjoy it," Kuhn said.

Charlie Bush, co-owner of Brother's Tavern, said people who frequent Brother's are tired of the disco sound and paying cover charges.

Brother's has one game, "Puds for Suds," where questions about the bar, current events and sports are asked, with free beer awarded for the first correct answer.

"We had a cheek-peek one time. The main reason I did it was because another bar was having a wet T-shirt contest and we wanted to do something for the guys instead," he said.

THE BAR owners and managers interviewed agreed most persons involved in the games were "regulars" but that

"It's also a place where you can bring your mother and have a good time."

everybody had the chance to participate and win free prizes.

Although the contests sponsored by some bars may seem a little wild, the people rarely are, they said.

"We get some people that are overly drunk," Ramey said, "but they're not overly rowdy."

Mike McKenney said the effects of the contest depend on the people participating.

"This is a hell of a group of kids," he said. "Nobody means to hurt or harm anyone, people just want to meet other people, to laugh and have fun."

Each bar presents its own atmosphere and gimmicks to bring people in to spend money and have fun, fun, fun.

The decision on which bar to patronize is left solely up to you.

After all, it's your money

Tornado kills four in Missouri town

PLEASANT HILL, Mo. (AP)—A tornado ripped apart this country town on the southeast fringe of Kansas City Wednesday afternoon and the Missouri Highway Patrol said four were killed.

The patrol had the names of 10 injured, but it was estimated upward of 40 people were hurt.

The deaths, injuries and damage were concentrated in a cluster of 25 to 30 mobile homes in the southeast part of Pleasant Hill.

SCHOOL authorities said they had time to get pupils to safe places at the severely damaged high school and at a middle school and grade school. The only casualty among about 1,350 children was one boy with a broken leg.

The twister emerged from a system of thunderstorms which tore from southwest to northeast, hitting towns in Kansas southwest of Kansas City, crossing the state line south of Kansas City and pushing through Harrisonville, Pleasant Hill, Higginsville and Sedalia, which is 90 miles to the east.

Some injuries and considerable damage were reported when high winds, described by Civil Defense authorities as a tornado, hit Southwest Village, a housing development south of the Missouri State Fair grounds in the west part of Sedalia. The city was without power.

A child was reported hurt when two mobile homes were wrecked at Higginsville.

THE WORST devastation was at Pleasant Hill, official population 3,396, about 25 miles from midtown Kansas City and about eight from the southeast metropolitan area limits.

Every trailer in the mobile home park seemed to be destroyed.

The twister hopped to the high school, where it took the roof of the gymnasium and part of the main building and blew out parts of the walls of both.

About 40 cars were in the high school's parking lot and it looked like a junkyard.

A house or two here and there were spared but throughout town others were smashed, blown away or heavily damaged.

Power and telephone service went out as poles toppled or falling trees snapped the lines.

A MILITARY police company of the Missouri Army National Guard—about 100 men—was mustered for duty in Pleasant Hill.

The severe storms forecast center of the National Weather Service, which is in Kansas City, started tracking the violent activity near Paola, Kan., about 35 miles southwest.

Several funnel clouds were spotted and one reportedly touched ground on a country road east of Paola.

Mobile homes were damaged at Louisburg, Kan., near the Missouri line about 20 miles south of Kansas City. Harrisonville, on the Missouri side, had some damage from high winds but apparently no injuries.

One of the victims at the mobile home park was reported to be a small child whose neck was broken. Another victim there was reported to be a woman whose legs were severed.

Sgt. Jim Watson of the Missouri Highway Patrol, who set up a command post at police headquarters for the emergency forces, confirmed two were killed at the mobile home park and another in the Country Club Addition, a housing development just to the northeast.

No one apparently was hurt at Broadway Village, a senior citizens home just to the north; but it was so badly damaged that the two dozen residents were taken to a Baptist Church, where the Red Cross had set up a relief station and temporary homes were sought for them.

More student involvement is goal of Matlack, Thomas

Increased student involvement will be a major target for student government next fall, according to Student Body President Terry Matlack and Student Senate Chairperson Cindy Thomas.

"One overriding goal that I have is to communicate with students and get off-campus students involved with student government," Matlack said. "This is one of the areas we are working with now—to improve our communications through our Public Relations committee."

Thomas said she especially wanted to keep students involved in senate and get senators to communicate better with their constituents.

"I think student government, and particularly Student Senate in part, is kind of stagnant at this time and has lost a lot of prestige," she said.

Thomas said student elections will measure the success of improved communications.

"K-State, as far as Student Senate goes, has led the country as far as implementing new ideas and programs," she said.

Matlack said the proposed recreation complex and the adoption of an A-credit-no credit policy would also be concerns of student government. He also said senate would consider rape prevention proposals in the fall. Thomas said senate committees would work on senate representation by living groups as well as by colleges, a Union bookstore advisory council and registration by line number instead of class number.

Stock judging aids students in post-graduation job battle

Some K-State agriculture students are preparing for a job in a winning way.

Winning is a tradition for the K-State livestock judging teams, said Bill Able, professor of animal science and industry and coach of the team.

The teams have competed successfully this semester, placing in all the major livestock judging contests. The team won its last meet in Ames, Iowa, beating out six teams and 70 students.

"Enthusiasm for competition is caused by tradition of a winning team," Able said.

Twenty students make up three junior livestock teams that compete at the Denver livestock show, Fort Worth livestock show and Houston livestock show. The top five students go on to the senior team the following fall and compete at the American Royal in Kansas City and the stock show in Chicago.

"We work at it and go at it like a business and we go at it to win," Able said. "Whenever you can have someone well prepared and well trained, they will win their share."

"This decision-making process is good for the student," Able said. "Employers will know that if a kid has the will and determination to take the time to pursue something like the team, he will take the time to work for them."

CHRIS SANKEY, junior in animal science and industry, has lived on a ranch all of his life, but he says he is getting an edge on the job market through his participation on the judging team.

"It's really hard to get a job right out of college, because a lot of people who have never gone to college can manage a ranch," Sankey said. "The judging team helps a lot, for you've looked at enough animals through class and the contests that you can pick the best. This can mean more than what is on your transcript."

Students start working to qualify for the judging team the fall semester of their junior year by enrolling in Principles of Livestock Selection.

The class acquaints students with evaluating and placing the animals. The team is selected in January of each year to represent K-State at the contests.

"For me, judging has been more important than any of the classes that I've had," said Bob Kiger, junior in animal science and industry.

The 1974 and 1975 teams were undefeated, winning the American Royal and the North American International in Chicago.

"The most important thing about it is being able to select good livestock," Kiger said. "Because when you go out to get a job on a farm or ranch, they look for this ability."

NFL finishes college draft

NEW YORK (AP)—The big names were long gone when National Football League teams resumed their player draft Wednesday, still seeking to fill line-up gaps with the top graduating college players.

None of the second day selections could hope to match the $1.24 million, five-year contract that No. 1 choice Ricky Bell secured from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. But some of those latter round picks could be as important to their clubs and Bell is to Tampa Bay and No. 2 pick Tony Dorsett is to Dallas.

Bell was one of three Southern California players among the first five choices in the draft. The others were offensive tackle Marvin Powell, picked by the New York Jets, and defensive tackle Gary Jeter, selected by the New York Giants.

The 28 teams completed five draft rounds Tuesday, selecting 139 players. When round six opened Wednesday's action, USC remained a popular shopping stop, supplying the first two picks—quarterback Vince Evans to Chicago and defensive back Mike Burns to San Francisco.

Sports

FOR THE Bears, Evans represents a continuing search for the solution to the team's quarterback dilemma. Unhappy with Bob Avellini, who completed only 43.5 per cent of his attempts and managed only eight touchdown passes, Chicago has been stockpiling possible replacements.

First, the Bears signed ex-Heisman winner Pat Sullivan and then, during the first day of the draft, they swapped a fourth-round pick and their first selection in 1978, to Cleveland for Mike Phipps. Now Evans has been added to that crowd.

"For us to win," said Coach Jack Pardee, "our passing game has to get better. We need a completion average of 55 to 57 per cent."

Evans was only a mediocre passer until this season when he improved drastically, completing 54 per cent of his attempts with 95 of 177 for 1,440 yards and 10 touchdowns. He was the Most Valuable Player in the Rose Bowl when USC defeated Michigan 14-6.

BURNS WAS the second defensive back drafted by San Francisco, who had picked Stan Black of Mississippi State in the fourth round. The 49ers have a major hole to fill in their secondary with the retirement of veteran cornerback Jimmy Johnson.

Among some of the interesting second-day selections were running back Andre Hereera of Southern Illinois who rushed for 1,588 yards, second in the nation only to Dorsett, and running back Wilbert Montgomery of Abilene Christian, who led the nation with 37 touchdowns and 1,181 yards in 11 games in 1973 but never again approached that kind of production. Herrera was picked by Kansas City and Montgomery went to Philadelphia, both on the sixth round.

Washington and Philadelphia, their draft choices depleted by earlier trades, each had only one choice on the first day, the Redskins in the fourth round when they picked defensive end Duncan McColl of Stanford, and the Eagles in Round Five, when they chose defensive back Skip Sharp of Texas.

With only three more choices left in the remaining rounds, Washington made a strange deal with Los Angeles. The Redskins swapped their third-round choice in 1981 to the Rams for seventh- and ninth-round picks this year and an eighth-round selection in 1978.

Brock, Cardinals smash Cincy, 8-1

CINCINNATI (AP)—Lou Brock smashed three hits and passed Lou Gehrig in the all-time major league hit parade, and Bob Forsch pitched a four-hitter to lead the St. Louis Cardinals to an 8-1 decision over the Cincinnati Reds Wednesday night.

Brock hit one of three St. Louis homers in support of Forsch, 5-1. Gary Templeton and Tony Scott also blasted homers to pace a 16-hit Cardinal offense.

Brock's three hits gave him 2,724 for his career and lifted him past the one-time New York Yankee great into 32nd place on the all-time list.

Templeton and Ken Reitz also had three hits for St. Louis while Scott drove in three runs for the winners.

Woodie Fryman, 2-3, took the loss. He was knocked out in the sixth inning after Brock's home run and four other hits produced four runs to insure the victory.

Scott's first-inning home run was the first of his major league career. Templeton's and Brock's were their first of the season.

Pete Rose, beating out a slow roller to first in the first inning, extended his hitting streak to 18 games.

After Joe Morgan's single in the first, Forsch retired 14 batters in a row before Ed Armbrister's pinch single led off the sixth.

The Cardinals chased Fryman in the sixth inning after Brock's leadoff homer, a walk, Hernandez' double and three singles allowed three more runs to score.

Don't be fuelish.

NEWS FLASH!

Several Sig Alph scouts have brought back word that the "stooped figure" previously seen approaching Manhattan, is none other than their almost ninth-founder Paddy Murphy. The Alphas are overjoyed at the "annual coming" of their most illustrious derelict. Several kegs have been tapped in anticipation of his "staggering" arrival.

- Will one of the Alphas sober up in time to give Paddy a ride to town?
- Will Paddy's vision clear before he reaches Denison Avenue?
- What words of wisdom (if any) will Paddy "gurgle" upon his arrival?

Crawdads—best in live bait

Small children, people who only go fishing on weekends and diehards use it. If you only go angling occasionally it is probably the best thing to use.

Using live bait is one of the most common ways of fishing in Kansas. The person using live bait is usually not as successful as the angler using artificial lures, except for catfish.

Even though the best anglers use artificial lures, there will be a day of reckoning for you when you will need to know how to get your hands on some live bait.

The Angler

It has become a national tragedy that so few anglers get their live bait the natural way. Instead, they go to the local bait shop and buy it.

SINCE THIS column is mainly for college students and since college students spend most of their money for refreshments for the angling trip, I am going to describe some of the time-honored methods of acquiring your own crawdads.

Crawdads make excellent live bait and getting them is sometimes more fun than angling.

The quickest way to obtain a lot of crawdads is to rip off a bait shop. However, since most bait shop owners are rather big fellows, your angling expedition could be delayed indefinitely.

That is why I would recommend one of the following methods. Crawdads, or crayfish, as biology professors call them, are small animals that have nasty pinchers on them.

Crawdads live in shallow water and you can often seine them.

Creeks and small ponds are a good place to go crawdad seining.

CRAWDADS LIKE to dig holes in the mud to live in. Getting crawdads from their holes is difficult, but I have run across one method that works.

When I was a small boy I had a friend that everyone called Spike. Spike and I often went crawdad hunting behind our house. In case you haven't learned this, crawdads are almost as good to put in a teacher's desk as snakes.

Now Spike was a frisky little fellow, but he had a weakness—he was gullible. Spike and I were not having much luck extracting crawdads from their holes and I dropped a few hints to him.

Spike ran into his house and came out carrying his mother's shiny new Hoover vacuum cleaner. Fortunately he had a long extension cord and we proceeded to try to suck crawdads out of their holes.

Spike's mother then came out of the house. If I remember correctly, she did not care too much for what we were doing. I was a good friend of Spike's, but I suddenly remembered I had something to do at home—immediately.

I haven't seen Spike for 11 years. I don't know for sure what happened to him but I think he is still locked in his room.

Anyway, there is a moral to this story. Crawdads make good fish bait and they are easy to seine. If you must suck them out of their holes, make sure your mother doesn't catch you.

Russell quits Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — Bill Russell, coach and general manager of the Seattle SuperSonics for the past four seasons, will not return to the National Basketball Association team for the fifth and final year of his contract, a team spokesman said Wednesday.

During the past season, in which the Sonics finished 40-42 and failed to make the NBA playoffs for the first time in three years, Russell was "too expensive" in his dual role, said Sam Schulman, the Sonics' president.

Schulman said he preferred that the former Boston Celtics' great continue in one or the other jobs next season, but not both.

Observers predict that Bob Hopkins, presently the Sonics' assistant coach, will succeed Russell.

Schulman reached a settlement with Russell Wednesday on the final year of Russell's $250,000 annual contract with the team, spokesman Rick Welts said.

At the same time, Sonics assistant general manager Bob Walsh announced that he was being fired.

Hopkins completed his third year with the Sonics this past season. Prior to joining the Sonics, he was head basketball coach at Xavier of New Orleans for five years. Before that, he was head coach at Alcorn A&M for three seasons.

The 43-year-old Russell compiled a 162-166 record in four years at Seattle.

Wildcats sign 6-11 center

Greg Prudhoe, a 6-11, 220-pounder from Peoria (East), Ill., signed K-State's third 1977 basketball national letter-of-intent.

Prudhoe joins 6-7 Brent Murphy of Clinton, Iowa and 6-5 Rolando Blackman of Brooklyn, N.Y. as Wildcat signees.

Prudhoe averaged 21 points and 10 rebounds per contest for East Peoria High School his senior year and shot 55 per cent from the field. He was a Midwestern Nine all-conference selection and special mention Chicago Daily News all-stater.

In conference contests, Prudhoe averaged 18.7 points and 10 rebounds per game. He was among the top five scorers and top four rebounders in conference play and was voted Co-MVP of his league during 1977.

"Greg Prudhoe is an outstanding pivot prospect," said Jack Hartman, basketball coach. "He gives us badly-needed height, plus he possesses an excellent shooting touch and solid ballhandling skills."

Students pay at least $76 for utility installation costs

By JÜLIE DOLL
Collegian Reporter

Deposits and installation charges for electric, gas and telephone services will normally cost students a minimum of $76 and maybe more than $100.

Most students planning to live off-campus next fall will pay a $60 deposit to Kansas Power and Light Company (KPL) for gas and electric services.

KPL requires everyone except homeowners to pay a $60 deposit for gas and electricity. The deposit includes $30 for gas and $30 for electricity, or $60 for an all-electric service.

KPL'S DEPOSITS have doubled in the last five years and the company is considering a deposit increase in August if natural gas prices continue to rise.

"The deposit covers us against anyone who decides to leave without paying," said Dick Lagree, division manager for KPL.

Homeowners who have previously had KPL service and have not paid bills on time, must also pay the deposit, Lagree said.

Southwestern Bell Telephone Company does not require a deposit unless the person has failed to pay a bill on time and had previous phone service, said Jon Bentz, unit manager for Southwestern Bell.

Southwestern Bell has an installation charge, however, of $16 for modular telephones (the telephone user participates in installation) and $24 dollars for regular installation.

THE MINIMUM deposit to Southwestern Bell is $35 for those who are required to pay, Bentz said.

"Less than six per cent of the 18,000 customers in Manhattan pay deposits," Bentz said.

Both Southwestern Bell and KPL base deposit figures on a monthly cost average. Company officials said both also pay six per cent interest on the deposits.

After credit is established—12 months of regularly paying bills on time—the deposit plus six per cent interest is returned to the customer by both KPL and Southwestern Bell, according to both Lagree and Bentz.

The amount of deposits is not uniform throughout the state for Southwestern Bell or KPL. Generally, the smaller the community, the less the deposit.

"Urban areas usually have a higher rate of non-paying customers," Bentz said. "Students are some of our better customers; they usually pay their bills on time."

Students wanting cable TV can add $5 more to the costs. Installation of cable TV, even if the line is there and only needs connecting, is $5. The monthly charge for the cable runs about $7.

More than 5,000 pre-enroll for fall

During the first week of pre-enrollment, 5,030 students pre-enrolled for the fall semester. This is about the same rate as last year when two-week pre-enrollment totals reached 10,000, said Don Foster, director of student records.

Enrollment ends at 4:20 p.m. Friday in the basement of Farrell Library.

"We want as many students as we can to enroll by Friday because it is their last chance until August," he said. "Needless to say, the ease of accomplishing it is much greater now than in the fall."

Students who want to pre-enroll must pick up signed enrollment cards from their advisers and take them to the registration section in the library.

Student leaders face pressure, blues

The leadership blues have hit several student leaders at K-State, but they have found ways of dealing with it and few regret putting time into organizations.

"It is easy to get frustrated with organizations, but then I look back and I'm thankful for what I've been able to do," said Stan Watt, administrative assistant to the student body president and senior in agricultural economics.

People in the center of conflicting demands are bound to get "burned out," said Pete Sherrard, director of the Counseling Center in Holtz Hall.

"They have pressures coming from everywhere, and they must work on other people's demands and work on other people's time tables," he said.

"It's easy to get burned out towards this time of year," said Fred Works, sophomore in business and president of K-State's Association of Residence Halls. "You look back and wish you hadn't committed all your time to activities, and more to classes."

WORKS SAID he does things better under pressure, however, and enjoys being involved in activities.

Karen Reed, staff assistant at Boyd Hall and graduate student in guidance and counseling, said she has never regretted being active but gets "burnt out" when people don't follow through with the goals of a group.

"You get burnt out because other people don't do their job, but then this can help you get fired up, too," Reed said.

Students question University policies

Students were given a chance Wednesday to air grievances about University policies to Student Body President Terry Matlack and Student Grievance Counselor Ted Knopp—but attendance at the Union courtyard session was poor.

Some students expressed concern about the location of the proposed recreation complex. Matlack told students no site has been determined, although Memorial Stadium and L.P. Washburn complex areas are being considered.

"In finding a location we want to have students use it as efficiently as we can since they are paying for it," said one student, who opposed the L.P. Washburn site.

"We want to get the most building we can for the money," Matlack said.

Another student asked why beer isn't sold in the Catskeller.

"It strikes me that the Union is relinquishing to Aggieville businesses," the student said.

Stan Watt, Matlack's administrative assistant, said the Union Governing Board (UGB) polled a number of students last year and there was "not enough student interest" to formulate plans to sell the beer. Watt said UGB then dropped the idea.

"I think it (the forum) went well," Matlack said afterwards. "There wasn't a great number of students, but if we can sit down and talk to 10 students, it's well worth our time."

"I was upset with the turnout," said Diddy Bell, senate public relations director and planner of the forum. "The one thing about the forum I was pleased with was that there was continual talking. At least we got to a few students."

"I would never do it again," said one female leader who did not wish to be identified. "My sophomore year I had at least one meeting every night and then I worked at a job until midnight. Then I had either a 7:30 or 8:30 a.m. class every day. I had to have everything scheduled all the time."

"During my freshman, sophomore and junior years, I placed more emphasis on activities than grades because I believed I learned more about people and the administration through the activities," she said.

BECAUSE HER classes were general until last year, she said she was more interested in outside activities than schoolwork.

"I learned a lot and I am glad I had all those activities," she said. "And if I could have done more I would have. You can learn a lot through activities, but you have to give up a lot for them."

Sherrard said many people get burned out on organizations because they have changed their priorities.

"But priorities are rarely clean," he said. "There are clusters of priorities and they are all linked together."

"I get burned out when being involved takes away from other things, like grades," said Craig

Swann, junior in business administration and K-State director of Associated Students of Kansas (ASK). "But then something always comes along that makes it all worthwhile."

Active people need to pace themselves, Sherrard said, which is what Student Body President Terry Matlack said he tries to do.

"Like anyone who runs the 1,500 meter knows, you can't burn up all your energy in the first 100 yards," Sherrard said.

MATLACK SAID he tries not to get "overloaded," but also gets burned out when he is not accomplishing anything or "moving in a specific direction."

Breaks for renewal are also helpful for active people, Sherrard said.

"Each person has his own way of getting away from it all," he said. "Some people go fishing, some dance; I love to swim. Sometimes you just have to get away and go on vacation."

Jon Bosh, junior in political science and chancellor of K-State's Tribunal court, said he uses jogging as a means to relax and revive himself. He said he realizes there are other things he could be doing if he weren't so active in organizations but doesn't regret participating in campus organizations.

Foreign delegations to come to Kansas

WASHINGTON (AP)—At least six foreign countries will send delegations to Kansas for a fall International Trade Conference, according to Kansas Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith.

Smith, in Washington with 90 members of the Kansas Cavalry, said Sudan, Kenya, New Zealand, Australia, Indonesia and Japan have indicated they will send trade missions.

The Governor's International Trade Conference will be Sept. 16 at Hutchinson in conjunction with the Kansas State Fair.

The Kansans wrapped up their three-day campaign Wednesday in the nation's capital with the aim being to sell the benefits of economic trade and expansion in Kansas.

Representatives from 100 embassies were invited to lunch Wednesday with the Cavalry, a volunteer group of state boosters.

New logic, analytical section will be added to GRE exam

K-State students taking the Graduate Records Examinations (GRE) Aptitude Test next fall will find a new section added to the exam.

Along with the verbal and quantitative parts of the GRE, there will be a logical and analytical section, said Robert Kruh, dean of the K-State graduate school.

Although K-State does not require the GRE, other schools which K-Staters may be entering do. Some programs at the University of Kansas require the GRE, Kruh said.

It marks the first change in the test since the 1940s when it was introduced. The new section evaluates students placed in hypothetical situations, Kruh said.

Janis Somerville, GRE program director at Educational Testing Service (ETS) which administers the exam for the GRE Board, said the new section will test a student's skills in a number of areas.

"Students will be able to show their ability to recognize logical relationships, draw conclusions from a complex series of statements and determine relationships between independent or interdependent categories of groups," she said.

The 1977-78 GRE Bulletin of Information will include sample questions and explanations of the answers for the new section. The bulletin is sent free to students registering for the GRE.

About 300,000 college students take the three-hour test each year as admission to graduate school.

Men of Straube feel bitter, most have found fall homes

By TERRY BRUNGARDT
Collegian Reporter

People passing the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Thurston next year won't see men playing basketball or volleyball on the cement slab which is a part of Straube Scholarship House.

They might be able to catch a few on the Derby residence hall complex basketball court, but the closing of Straube in May will separate most residents of the cooperative house—and they are bitter.

The scholarship house, owned by the K-State Endowment Association and operated by K-State Housing, is being closed because it's too costly to make the necessary repairs to meet state fire regulations.

THE 43 MEN who participate in the cooperative-style living will go different ways in the fall. Some have joined fraternities, others will move off-campus and 14 have decided to move to fifth floor Moore Hall.

Most residents have accepted the closing and have found a place to live next year, said Straube President Richard Arpen.

The closeness shared by the residents will be gone. As one member said, "The uniqueness of a scholarship house like Straube will never be found anywhere else we live."

The low-cost living will also be lost, which is a concern to many of the residents.

SOME RESIDENTS were told they will get more money from grants and work-study employment, but about 20 of the Straube men agreed those extra supplements will not cut costs to the level of scholarship house living.

Some residents now joke about their situation and what has happened to them in the months since the announcement the house would close, but a feeling of bitterness lingers.

"We were bitter when we found out that they were closing the house," said Steve Arpen, freshman in agricultural education. "We felt we were being put out in the cold."

"I couldn't believe it when I heard the news," said Jim Sellers, freshman in industrial engineering. "I have lived here for a year and all of a sudden I felt lost."

Original hopes of saving the house if money could be found have disappeared.

"I, along with a lot of other guys in the house, got the impression from (Housing Director Thomas) Frith that if we raised enough money then maybe we could keep the house open," Arpen said. "Then we talked to (K-State President Duane) Acker and found that there was nothing we could do about the situation."

Capitol plaza plan now under study

TOPEKA (AP)—John Carlin, speaker of the Kansas House, said Wednesday he anticipates a package of recommendations will be offered to the 1978 legislative session for further development of the Capitol Area Plaza.

The area includes the Kansas Statehouse and grounds, the State Office Building, and the Kansas Supreme Court Building, now under construction, and adjoining areas.

Carlin said suggestions made by the Capitol Area Plaza Authority March 22 came too late in the 1977 session for action. But he said the proposals are under study and will receive further examination between sessions.

Tribunal finds two break honor code

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Two K-State students who allegedly stole Manhattan street signs last month were found guilty Thursday by the Student Tribunal of violating the K-State honor code.

Tribunal announced after a closed hearing the students were found guilty of not upholding local community laws and thereby violated the honor code.

Richard Cook, freshman in electrical engineering, and Theodore Ingold, freshman in Pre-design professions, were arrested last month but were released after spending eight hours in the Riley County Jail.

Cook said he thought the proceedings were fair, but refused to comment further.

A K-STATE Security and Traffic officer took the men into custody when they reportedly saw them take the signs and followed them back to their dormitory.

Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter said charges were not filed against the men because the evidence in the case was "tainted."

"It was an illegal search," Sauter said. "Security and Traffic did not get a search warrant."

Sauter said it was his decision whether to file charges.

"It was my decision to make and I don't think it was a legal search," he said.

Sauter refused to give any details about the search or the case.

John Bosch, tribunal chancellor, said tribunal sentenced the two men to a one-year probation during which they must abide by certain conditions. He did not give any of those conditions.

TRIBUNAL has the authority to expell students from K-State.

Pat Bosco, assistant dean of students, said it was no uncommon for the county attorney to refer cases involving students to the University judicial system.

"The current county attorney and the one before him set up a referral system with the University," he said.

"This case was investigated by the campus police and then sent to the county attorney. The county attorney asked the university to handle the case and the Judicial Council decided to refer the case to the tribunal due to the gravity of the charge," Bosco said.

New credit proposal to go before faculty

BY DAN WILLIAMS
SGA Editor

In its last meeting of the semester, Student Senate last night voted overwhelmingly to send a resolution to Faculty Senate requesting that body to adopt an A-credit-no credit system to replace the current credit-no credit system.

The proposed system would give a student an A grade for A work in a credit-no credit class. It would also increase motivation of students taking classes credit-no credit, said Pat Sargent, sponsor of the resolution.

"It's designed so that students who do excellent work will get that evaluation," Sargent, business senator, said. "They will be more motivated to learn."

Sargent said the policy would become an incentive for students who were interested in a course but not sure about their abilities in that field.

"This is usually a case where someone wants to explore an area outside his curriculum," he said.

SARGENT also said the number of students receiving A's in the system would not be large enough to contribute to grade inflation.

"I don't think it's substantial enough that grades would shoot up," he said. "There's not going to be a great deal of A's added on."

Sargent told the body the A credit would not count against the hours a student may take credit-no credit if the grade were figured in the student's GPA, but said he did not know exactly how grades would be counted. Currently, students can take one-sixth of their total hours credit-no credit.

Although the resolution passed 38 to 1, with three abstentions, the plan did not clear senate without vocal opposition.

Two former senators who studied A-credit-no credit last year told the body they had found more arguments against the plan than in favor of it.

Julie Hampl, former business senator, told senate the plan would not increase student motivation to "explore" as Sargent had argued.

"You take a class credit-no credit because you don't want to put the work into it," Hampl said. "You can't convince me otherwise."

"STATISTICS will show you that students who think they can get an A in a class won't take it credit-no credit," she said. "We worked on it several months and we found it wasn't a very good idea."

Hampl took issue with Sargent on another issue, saying the policy would result in grade inflation.

"If you didn't think this would affect enough people, you wouldn't be here," she told senate.

Twisters hit Topeka area; Missouri assesses damage

TOPEKA (AP)—A flurry of tornadoes whipped through the Topeka area Thursday night, killing one but causing only limited property damage.

Lorrie Clare, 10, was electrocuted when lightning from the storm system struck her home in rural Jefferson County northeast of Topeka. No other injuries were reported at press time.

The Shawnee County Sheriff's office said it received more than 150 calls of sightings in a two-hour period just before dusk and, at one point, three separate funnels were spotted simultaneously. The sheriff's office indicated as many as 15 separate funnel clouds may have been spotted during the evening.

Deputy Mike Blankenship said most of the funnels apparently touched down in outlying farm areas or sparsely populated locations.

Most of the sightings were over the east and southeast sections of the city.

Golfball size hail and strong winds accompanied the storm.

In Pleasant Hill, Mo., victims of a storm system which struck Wednesday and spawned three dozen tornadoes, assessed damages Thursday.

The Missouri death toll remains at the three recorded in the Pleasant Hill-Harrisonville area on the southeast fringe of Kansas City.

Hundreds were injured, about 50 of them seriously enough to be admitted to hospitals. A dozen were in serious to critical condition.

An estimated 2,000 homes were uninhabitable.

Damage estimates soared.

"I'm stunned to see the wrath of the storm," said Missouri Gov. Joseph Teasdale after he surveyed the damage at Pleasant Hill.

TEASDALE issued a statement saying he has asked that Cass, Lafayette and Pettis counties in Missouri be declared major disaster areas.

If approved by President Carter, the three counties would be eligible for special unemployment assistance, housing for the homeless, grants for public facilities, funds for rebuilding of homes, medical care, restoration of medical and emergency facilities, and loans from the Small Business Administration.

Eighteen of 36 tornadoes touched down in a belt which was about 40 miles wide between Lawrence and Paola, Kan., crossed the state line just below Kansas City, reached 90 miles eastward to Sedalia, Mo. and spread out to the north.

A-credit proposal contested

After the vote, Deb Miller, a former engineering senator who agreed with Hampl, called Sargent's arguments on motivation "pure guff," and agreed with Hampl that students take classes credit-no credit to get out of working.

"This ('exploring') doesn't mean a thing when you get out on campus," Miller said.

She also found flaws in Sargent's logic on grade inflation, saying he contradicted himself.

"They (resolution supporters) say no more A's are going to be given, and then on the other hand they say it's going to motivate them to get the A's," Miller said.

DENT Wilcoxson, Student Senate faculty representative, abstained from voting because he said senate glossed over many of the arguments against the proposed system. Wilcoxson said, however, he was generally in favor of A-credit-no credit because it could motivate some, if not many, students to work hard and get A's.

"I thought they were overlooking Julie (Hampl's) arguments and simply not facing the realities of the situation," he said.

Wilcoxson said whether students "explore" or just take the class credit-no credit to reduce their workloads wouldn't matter—the students would lose motivation anyway.

"It comes to the same thing," he said. "They get in there not intending to slack off, but that happens."

Wilcoxson, professor of history, said he has seen no opposition to the plan in Faculty Senate, and said he favored it because it could help some students, but "such cases are very rare."

"We (faculty) don't expect it to change things much," he said. "It will do some good and it won't do any harm."

'Don't fund me,' asserts Ted Knopp; grievance counselor needs no salary

By DAN WILLIAMS
SGA Editor

Ted Knopp, student grievance counselor, told Student Senate last night he did not think his recently created job was worth the $100 a month salary the body allocated for it earlier this semester.

"If I were to have to make a decision for you (senate) next semester, I'd continue it (the position), but I can't justify funding it," Knopp, sophomore in general, told the body.

"The position is a really worthy one, yet I can't see that, with the amount of student use I've gotten, I'd be really earning the money," he said.

Earlier in the semester, senate allocated $200 to fund the grievance counselor for April and

May. During tentative allocations, the body moved to place $900 in reserves to fund the position for the rest of the school year if senate thought the counselor worthwhile.

Knopp said senate could find people who would do the job for nothing but to include it on a resume.

"I can't help but believe if a person's interested in a position, whether it pays or not won't matter," he said. "Right now, I don't think I've been used enough to be worth $100 a month."

Knopp said he has seen between 12 and 15 people since he started work April 5, and said some of the money which goes to his salary could be better spent advertising his services.

If his contacts increase next fall, Knopp said "I could sing a different song" about the salary, but added he would not recommend that senate fund the position during final allocations in October.

Two boys escape policemen briefly

A 16-year-old, one of two juveniles being held for questioning about several break-ins around Manhattan, escaped Thursday from Riley County Police while being transferred from the department administration building to the jail.

The boy escaped about 11 a.m. Thursday and was taken into custody again an hour later in downtown Manhattan.

This was the second escape for police in 24 hours. The other juvenile held in the case escaped from the Riley County Courthouse Wednesday and was recaptured about 20 minutes after he left the building.

The two were arrested Monday along with a 19-year-old after being stopped by police for a traffic violation. They were held for questioning about several break-ins in Manhattan and Ogden involving vending machines in taverns and restaurants.

WASHINGTON—In a surprise move Thursday, the House Government Operations Committee voted to strip U.S. oil companies of their right to purchase oil and give that authority to the federal government.

By an 18 to 16 vote, the committee added the amendment to President Carter's legislation for a new Cabinet-level energy department.

Under the proposal, offered by Rep. John Conyers, (D-Mich.), the U.S. government would become the "sole importing agent" for oil produced by the Organization of Petroleum-Exporting Countries.

The proposed new federal energy department would then resell the OPEC oil to energy companies in the United States.

Conyers said his proposal would break up what he claimed was a questionable relationship now enjoyed by huge U.S.-based energy companies and OPEC.

TOPEKA—The Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services has ordered that no new clients be added in the Title XX social services program in the last two months of the fiscal year.

Lauren Harrod, chief of social services for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, said the programs will remain in operation for clients already being served.

"We won't be operating on a wide-open basis anymore," he said.

The department had been sounding warnings at public hearings since last October that the amount of funding was limited and that local agencies should look at alternative funding, Harrod said.

But billings for services have increased dramatically in the last three months, he said.

Title XX funds services for elderly, disabled persons, youths and alcoholics including the homemakers program which is designed to allow elderly people to remain in their homes rather than be institutionalized.

PHOENIX, Ariz.—A Superior Court hearing is scheduled next Thursday on a change of venue and several other defense motions in the trial of two men accused of the car-bomb murder of Arizona Republic reporter Don Bolles.

Superior Court Judge Howard Thompson has been asked to move the June 10 trial of Phoenix contractor Max Dunlap and suburban Chandler plumber James Robison, charged with murder and conspiracy to commit murder in the June 1976 slaying.

Defense attorneys have asked for the change of venue because of massive publicity surrounding the case. The lawyers claim that publicity increased after Jan. 15, the day confessed slayer John Harvey Adamson pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in exchange for his testimony against others in the case.

Before entering the plea agreement, Adamson's trial was moved from Phoenix to Tucson in December by an Arizona Supreme Court ruling.

WASHINGTON—President Carter set out Thursday on his first venture in international summitry, a meeting of seven of the world's richest nations which are discussing how to stay that way.

Carter's first trip overseas—to Great Britain, where a genealogist says the President has his roots—also includes a meeting between France, Britain, West Germany and the United States to discuss such issues as Berlin and the spread of nuclear power.

The six-day journey will take Carter on to Geneva, Switzerland, where he will meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad to talk about Carter's efforts to convene a Geneva Conference on the Middle East.

Treatment of aged national crime

There is a group of people in the United States which has been treated shamefully for as long as they've been in this country. It's a group most citizens eventually will belong to, but nevertheless is the butt of blatant discrimination.

AN UNWRITTEN American rule says people are no longer useful when they are 65 years old, despite being the country's most valuable resource.

To be old and poor is a full-time job. The process of survival for the elderly is as demeaning as it is inhumane. Because most elderly people are denied a chance to earn enough to live on, they must battle a shameful mass of welfare and Medicaid services which make the senior citizen feel more a burden to society than an asset.

IT'S CRIMINAL that the system grudgingly coughs up welfare-oriented dollars to the aged when they would prefer doing something constructive and having an active, useful role in society. It's criminal that there are laws giving civil rights to virtually all minorities and social groups while there is nothing protecting the elderly.

It's intimidating because the elderly is a group most people will belong to someday.

It's time to look upon the elderly as an asset rather than a burden and to realize the national treatment of the aged is criminal.

SENIOR CITIZENS are a valuable resource that has been wasted in this country far too long. It's time for all Americans to realize how valuable the elderly are and respond accordingly.

Ignoring the talents of such a large group of persons is not only stupid, it's criminal and should stop.

A last, fond farewell

"Could you please point me in the direction of West Hall?"

That question was posed by a bewildered 17-year-old in the summer of 1973. That bewildered person was me.

It was orientation time at K-State and I was making only my second visit to the campus in my young life. I walked up to a man outside the Union who looked like someone who wouldn't send me traipsing off to the Military Science Building.

He pointed me in the proper direction, and I've always been grateful. Because I would have gone any direction he had told me. I may never have been found again.

That was the beginning of my collegiate career, four years ago. Somehow, it just doesn't seem possible that it has come to an end.

I WAS still a bewildered 17-year-old in August of '73 as I said goodbye to my parents in Lot 69 across from Haymaker Hall. There was an empty feeling as I trudged across the field toward Haymaker and Room 220, my new home.

That feeling didn't last long. Soon my roommate and several of my friends from home had gathered in the room and all of a sudden it hit me: I was on my own. Completely. I could do anything and everything I wanted.

It didn't take me long to realize this was going to be fun.

My first college class was English Composition at 7:30 a.m. Monday. I can't be excited about anything at 7:30 in the morning. And so, I set the pattern for my collegiate career: after about five minutes of listening to the GTA, I nodded off into a deep sleep. I awoke at the bell, the board full of writing and everyone getting up to leave.

I smiled. I had to. It was going to be an interesting career.

I LOOKED at my schedule and decided that U.S. History was my next class. But at 8:30 a.m. some guy came in and wrote something completely different on the board. I consulted my schedule. Gee, the classes weren't listed in order. Whoops, 8:30, Speech, Military Science Building.

I got up and, with the least amount of fanfare possible, left. I heard a few snickers as I walked out the door.

Where was the Military Science Building? I had no idea. So I stumbled around, asking directions, and found it by 8:40. As I prepared to walk into the classroom, everyone else was walking out.

Great. I'd slept through one class and missed another. But I wasn't fazed. This all was merely going to keep things fairly interesting.

But as I soon discovered, the things you would take away from college that are most valuable are not the kinds of things you learn in a classroom. It's the people you meet and interact with who provide the learning experiences.

IN MANY ways, the dorm is great for a freshman. I made lots of friends. I learned to play spades. And I soon found that, if studying didn't strike your fancy at that moment (which it usually didn't), you could roam the halls and find someone to goof off with.

Aggieville. Yes, I went through the Aggieville stage, a stage which most students grow out of by the time they're seniors. My 18th birthday was in September, and so two friends and I hit all the bars for free birthday pitchers.

Six bars later, Richard C. threw up on the table in Mr. K's. It was time to go home.

Other memories stand out. Hours and hours of card games. Trips to Tuttle, returning with bloodshot eyes. The great water fights of 2nd floor. The great Kedzie party of spring, '76.

NOT ALL the memories are good ones. I remember studying for a test at 4 a.m. when I could barely keep my eyes open. I remember getting up at 6 a.m. to study. It was those times that made you wonder why you'd pay money to have to do things like that.

There was disillusionment. Dreams unfulfilled. The onset of cynicism. A lot of the academic nonsense got very old.

It is difficult to place everything in perspective now. Maybe 10 years from now I will be able to. Maybe not. Maybe four years of college is a dream, the meaning of which is never meant to be understood.

Well, just as it was time to go home when Richard threw up, so is it time to leave now. It's been fun, and I'm sorry it's over, but there will always be new freshmen asking to find the Military Science Building.

Have a good life.

Coverage nonexistent

Editor,

Congratulations go to the Collegian for its follow-up on the third annual canoe race between K-State and our arch-rivals down the river.

IT MIGHT be known that K-State had four canoes on the bank before any University of Kansas canoe had crossed the finish line.

KU had a reporter there constantly taking pictures, but no one from the Collegian was to be found.

Thanks for the coverage. Keep up the "good work."

a round of one-handed applause

... goes to the Riley County Police Department for its zealous enforcement of bicycle registration laws.

This spring there has been a crackdown on those heinous offenders, who dare to ride on city streets without registering their bikes.

BICYCLISTS ticketed for riding unregistered bikes are subject to a $10 fine as well as the cost of the registration.

Undoubtedly, most Manhattan residents fear above all things a bicyclist riding unlawfully and the Riley County Police are responding accordingly.

Many bicyclists are being pulled over and ticketed as the Riley County Police protect the trembling, fear-crazed citizens of Manhattan from the dreaded, spoke-wheeled hordes.

MEANWHILE, this week two prisoners escaped from Riley County Police within the span of 24 hours.

Thus for ticketing bicyclists, when it should be doing something better with its time, the Riley County Police Department receives a one-handed round of applause, quieter than the sound of a bicycle breaking the law.

Congress charges taxpayers for 'grip and grin' pictures

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congress billed taxpayers $341,000 last year to pay 19 photographers and darkroom assistants to produce hundreds of thousands of publicity photos.

The photographers snap pictures of home-town high school bands playing on the Capitol steps, Girl Scouts, potential campaign donors socializing at fund-raising dinners and senators shaking hands with visiting constituents.

"We call them 'grip and grin' shots," said a Republican campaign aide who supervises one of the four photo labs on the Capitol grounds. There is one each for Senate Republicans, Senate Democrats, House Republicans and House Democrats.

MANY senators and congressmen routinely give copies of the photographs to visitors as keepsakes, or send them to home-town newspapers in hopes that they will be published, according to supervisors of the photo operations.

Some of the photos occasionally find their way into textbooks, covers of books written by senators or congressmen, political campaign posters, into national news publications and the wires of major news agencies.

Salaries for the photographers formerly were paid by the Democratic and Republican campaign committees of the Senate and House. These committees, whose purpose is to aid members of their political parties win congressional elections, still direct the work of the photographers and pay for their film, photographic paper and chemicals.

BUT CONGRESS transferred the Senate photographers to the public payroll in 1962 and the House photographers in 1975. In addition, Congress awarded many of them retroactive longevity credit toward their congressional pensions which potentially are worth several thousands of dollars a year apiece in pensions paid by the taxpayers.

In an interview, the senior House Democratic photographer, A. D. "Dev" O'Neill, took credit for setting up the photo operation and getting it shifted from political to public financing. "I originated the whole concept," O'Neill said.

O'Neill, a popular political fixture around Washington since the Truman administration, described his work primarily as a service to news organizations. He said that some congressional photographers engage in "political gimmicks" but that his photographers do not.

"Ours is legitimate," he said. "It's not political."

The cost of the photo operations is part of the swelling yearly outlays for the legislative branch, which are budgeted to exceed $1 billion this year for the first time.

The photographers were paid less when they were on privately financed political payrolls. O'Neill drew a $20,000 salary in 1974, the last year he was paid by the National Congressional Committee, which gets its money from voluntary donations. On Jan. 1, 1975 O'Neill went on the House payroll and his salary jumped to $34,000 a year. He now is getting a yearly salary of more than $38,000, making him the highest paid of the 19 photo workers.

Six other photographers got congressional salaries exceeding $20,000 last year, and another five got salaries between $17,000 and $20,000 each. O'Neill's son Thomas, 23, is on the payroll at about $10,000 a year. O'Neill said he named the boy for Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, no relation, who is now Speaker of the House.

HE SAID his photographers assist national news organizations to cover Congress when their own photographers are too busy. Photo editors at The Associated Press said congressional photographers occasionally offer photographs for news use, but estimated that no more than 50 of them are transmitted by The AP in any one year. O'Neill estimated that his photographers produce a total of 130,000 photos each year.

When O'Neill and the other House photographers were transferred from political to public payrolls Congress granted them and the Senate photographers valuable pension rights.

Although the Civil Service Commission opposed the idea strongly in a letter to the House, both the Senate and House passed the special pension bill without debate or dissent. Then-President Gerald Ford signed it without comment on Jan. 3, 1975.

Committee approves charge for barge use of waterways

WASHINGTON (AP)—Legislation to charge barge owners for the use of inland waterways cleared one Senate committee Thursday but still must win approval of another committee before it comes to a vote on the floor.

The House has taken no action on the measure.

THE PUBLIC Works Committee approved the bill, which also calls for building a new, 1,200 foot lock at Alton, Ill., by a 14-1 vote. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen (D Tex.) dissented.

The bill now goes to the Commerce Committee. No timetable for action there has been set.

The bill's backers hope to keep user fees tied to the Alton lock, regarded by the barge industry as a key to navigation on the upper Mississippi River, so that the industry cannot get the lock without also having the fees imposed.

The cost of the locks and other navigation facilities maintained by the Army Corps of Engineers has been estimated at nearly $1 billion a year.

THE BILL sponsored by Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) calls for the Department of Transportation to establish a system of tolls and other charges which would gradually increase over a period of 10 years.

Benefits of trial court system to appear in time, judge says

OVERLAND PARK (AP)—The chief justice of the Kansas Supreme Court said Thursday it will take some time for the advantages inherent in trial court unification to be manifested and said any change in unification laws would be premature and unwarranted.

The state's top court official, Harold Fatzer, in a "state of the Courts" report to the Kansas Bar Association, asked lawyers to assist in making the new system work smoothly.

FATZER praised the early work of the new Court of Appeals. He said it already is apparent that taking an appeal to the new court costs litigants less, which is very significant.

"The cost of litigation simply makes it economically unfeasible for some people to seek legal recourse," Fatzer said. "It is our professional duty to reduce the cost of legal services wherever possible."

The chief justice said another trend also is apparent: There will be more appeals.

UNDER the old system where appeal was only to the Kansas Supreme Court, 400 appeals were docketed in 1976.

He said with the new court, the increase will be three-fold, to 1,200, if the present rate of docketing continues for the remainder of 1977.

Fatzer called for the judicial department budget to be placed in proper perspective. He said it makes up only 0.4 of one per cent of the total state budget.

Democrats frown on special session

TOPEKA (AP)—Democratic leaders in the Kansas Legislature have warned that a call by Gov. Robert Bennett for a special session later this month might fall on deaf ears.

The governor has said he is weighing the possibility of vetoing an income tax bill which is tied to another measure he wants, and then calling lawmakers back to Topeka to deal with the matter.

But House Speaker John Carlin (D-Smolton), and Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City), said that would be a waste of money.

"If he tried to veto the income tax bill and then call us back into session, I don't think he'd get a quorum," Steineger said Thursday in a telephone conversation from his Kansas City law office.

ASKED what he would tell fellow Senate Democrats should Bennett ask lawmakers to return, Steineger said, "I would advise them that it would be a complete waste of taxpayers' money."

Carlin said he too believes such a special session would be unnecessary, regardless of the governor's claim. Carlin said if the governor chooses to veto the tax bill, no immediate problems would develop requiring attention.

The income tax bill, which raises the individual exemption from $600 to $750, was tied late in the session with another measure—a conformity bill aimed at avoiding a potential $50 million additional federal tax bite on Kansas.

BUT CARLIN said Thursday should Congress change the federal tax law and delete the standard deduction, it's possible the legislature could wait until next January to pass legislation which would solve a resulting state problem.

Since the state tax form is based on the federal form, a decision by the government to delete the standard deduction would open Kansas tax-payers up to an additional $50 million tax liability, according to the Kansas Department of Revenue.

Carter to visit the ancestral home of first U.S. president

WASHINGTON, England (AP)—George Washington didn't sleep here. But his ancestors did, and the roots of America's first president go deep into this old English village.

President Carter and British Prime Minister James Callaghan will pay a whirlwind visit today to the manor house which sheltered Washingtons for 430 years before the Pilgrims ever sailed for Plymouth Rock.

WASHINGTON never saw the estate from which his ancestors took their name. The first of his clan to live in the manor was William de Hertburn of Hartburn.

As was the custom before surnames existed, he dropped Hertburn and assumed the name of the place which now belonged to him, "De Wessyngton," an Anglo-Saxon mixture meaning the estate of a Saxon chief called Hawes.

"If William hadn't moved, America's capital might today be called Heartburn," says overseer Sylvia Pettit. "I think we have quite a good reason to be grateful to this house."

CARTER will see the first president's ancestral home, about 270 miles northeast of London, now restored to grandeur through the efforts of patrons on both sides of the Atlantic.

Only 40 years ago, the imposing three-story mansion was a tenement. Six families living under a leaky roof without plumbing were evicted by the Health Department. The wrecking ball was poised to send the three-foot-thick sandstone walls crashing to rubble when they were saved by a group of local residents.

World War II intervened, and there was no time or money to spend on history. What was left of the house purchased by William in 1183 for four pounds and the loan of four greyhounds spent two more decades moldering in the rain. Its only inhabitants were the creatures of the field, its only protection a lush coat of moss.

In 1957 the local municipal council presented the building and its small acreage to Britain's National Trust, a publicly subscribed body which preserves historic monuments.

Fire regulations not clear; deputy to help with questions

By SHELLEY MITCHELL
Collegian Reporter

Since the fire destroyed the Kappa Sigma fraternity house at Baker University early last fall, there has been much concern by state fire inspectors about the safety of university housing.

Since the initial fire inspection last semester of all K-State greek houses, a new deputy from the state fire marshal's office has been sent to K-State fraternities and sororities to become acquainted with the jurisdiction, said Jerry Lilly Interfraternity Council adviser.

"This deputy is not making a reinspection, said Paul Markley of the state fire marshal's office. "He is answering questions residents have on the original inspection."

ACCORDING TO Markley, there are some deficiencies that prevent houses from meeting safety codes and residents say they don't understand what is needed to meet the requirements.

"However, there are other faults that just aren't being fixed such as installation of fire extinguishers," Markley said. "We feel that some people at K-State are dragging their feet in some instances when the improvements are self-explanatory."

Markley said that all K-State greek houses will need some repairs to comply with state fire regulations. Each house is responsible for paying for the repairs.

The state inspector found common deficiencies including, lack of enclosed stairwells, improper doors (all doors must swing out), furnace rooms that aren't closed off from the rest of the house and some houses need more clearly marked exits, Markley said.

"Some of the homes might not be able to completely change, but they better make a good showing," he said. "And some repairs will take longer than others. But if they aren't taken care of sufficiently by next fall, cease and desist orders will be issued and these houses won't open."

AFTER COMPLIANCE to safety regulations, the houses also will need proper maintenance, Markley said.

Lilly said that houses could start necessary repairs after interested companies finish submitting bids for installing smoke and heat detectors.

Although no estimate was available for all needed repairs, installation of smoke detectors will cost each house from $2,000 to $4,000 depending on the size of the house, Lilly said.

Both Lilly and Mark Eagleton, IFC president, said the second visit from the state office was necessary because the first inspection was not complete.

They're 'going to miss it'

Family loses home to twister

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

SEDALIA, Mo.—An unshaven Jim Clark surveyed the splintered wood and mangled steel that had once been his house as his friends and neighbors began picking up the pieces.

"I'm going to miss it—I've lived here all my married life."

As the twister that ravaged Sedalia hit his home, Clark, his wife and 10-month-old daughter were huddled in a hall closet. They abruptly found themselves behind their living room couch—and it was the only thing left standing in what had been their home.

The three were not seriously injured, as were most of the 28 other Sedalia residents hurt when the tornado raced through their town.

Clark was among 1,500 homeless in this city of 23,000; he and many of the others would be staying with relatives for awhile.

When the sirens sounded in Sedalia Wednesday, Clark said he looked out the front window and saw a funnel cloud tearing a path across a golf course near his home.

"All I can remember is blackness," Clark recalled, as the tornado lifted his house and tossed it off its foundation. "In the windows, it looked like a churning, dirty yellow mass."

Clark, who works for American Electrical Industries, said he and his wife, Janet, hid in the hall closet because they have no basement. They had their daughter squeezed between them to protect her.

When they found themselves in the open and rain falling on them, they ran for their car, which had two flat tires, and drove to a relative's house.

"I don't remember when I've been so scared," Clark said Thursday as he stood in the middle of what was once his kitchen. Now it was filled only with broken glass, books and bottles.

"I'll tell you this, though," he added. "The next house I buy will have a basement—a very deep basement."

The tornado began its 20-minute devastation at Southwest Village, a fashionable section south of the Missouri State Fairgrounds, and in the southwest part of town.

There was another concentration of damage in a section of homes and a few businesses between Broadway, which carries U.S. 50 east-west through Sedalia, and the main business district a few blocks north.

TRAGEDY HAS STRUCK!

Paddy Murphy (the almost ninth Sig Alph founder) unfortunately passed away this morning while in the prime of his "saturated" life. The Alphas are "hungover" at the thought of losing such an esteemed idol. According to the RCPD, Paddy was siphoning refreshments from an unattended beer wagon, when to his surprise the attendant returned and delivered a flashing Kung-Fu kick to Paddy's left shin. Paddy, in his rage, attempted to return the kick only to topple head-first into an open barrel of warm beer. Paddy was so content with his predicament that he neglected to come up for air. In that position the poor boy breathed his last.

Funeral arrangements are being made by the broken-hearted Alphas. Several cases of Vodka and grain alcohol have been purchased by them in an attempt to drown their sorrows!

Be watching and/or listening tomorrow afternoon as the Alphas say farewell to their Dear Paddy, the only way they know how.

Klaatu: imitation Beatles exposed...

By CHRIS JAMES
Collegian Reporter

A rumor that the Beatles were recording again—in secret—under the name Klaatu, has turned out to be one of the most lucrative tales ever spread in the music industry.

Nowhere on the album are members of the group identified. Representatives of Capitol Records, who released the album, profess not to know who is in the band.

The rumor claims the album was made by the Beatles to see if their music could stand on its own merits. The rumor also claims the Beatles were afraid if they recorded under their real names, they wouldn't be able to perform up to the expectations of the public.

ANOTHER VERSION of the rumor suggests the album is an old one recorded by the Beatles in 1967, the same time "Magical Mystery Tour," was released.

The people who want to believe or spread the rumors find further evidence in the fact the album was recorded by Capitol, the label of the Beatles.

Album sales followed the rumor. In its fourth week on the Billboard charts, "Klaatu" is number 44 among the albums, up ten points from the previous week. It has a star next to it, indicating upward movement.

For a listener to believe Klaatu is the Beatles, he would have to be unfamiliar with the Beatles, have heard the record over a low fidelity car radio, or on a poor stereo system, or have a very poor musical ear.

THE RECORD is most definitely a copy of the Beatles style during the "Magical Mystery Tour," period. It sounds like some people doing a good job of mimicking. You can tell who it is supposed to sound like, but you can also tell it's not the Beatles.

Frank Davies, manager of Klaatu, denied the band was the Beatles or even that the musicians were thinking of Beatle music when they recorded the album.

By that time, the rumors were all but unstoppable and sales were skyrocketing.

The extent of the rumors is reminiscent of the rumors of Paul McCartney's death which spread in 1970. Fans are looking for clues on the record by playing it backwards and finding clues on the cover.

DWIGHT DOUGLAS, program director of WWDC radio in Washington, decided to get to the bottom of it all. He went through the records in the copyright office in the Commerce Department, where it is required by law that all groups register their real names and pseudonyms if they record a copyrighted album for sale to the public. The names of the four musicians in Klaatu are; John Woloschuk, also known as L.M. Carpenter or Chip Dale, Cary Draper, David Long and Dino Tome.

They are a group of studio session men from Toronto, where the album was recorded last year.

FOR THOSE Beatles fans who are dying to get a new album by the fab four, there is one coming. Capitol Records is releasing an album based on concerts at the Hollywood Bowl in 1964 and 1965.

The tapes have been in Capitol's vaults for the past dozen years. Beatles producer George Martin and remix engineer Geoff Emerick have labored long hours filtering and equalizing to bring out the best of the music without overdubbing.

The album contains 13 songs and will be titled "The Beatles at the Hollywood Bowl."

...but music's good, original and unique

By KAY COLES

Arts and Entertainment Editor

The music of Klaatu is an obvious attempt to imitate the Beatles. After careful listening it is clear the music is not by the lads of Liverpool, but the album is still entertaining and well executed.

Side one opens with, "Calling Occupants of Interplanetary Craft," a doleful song about interstellar inhabitants trying to contact Earth. This song was chosen to be released as a single, probably because of its similarity to the Beatles' style. It is a pleasant song with strong composition and interesting lyrics.

The next two songs, "California Jam," and "Anus of Uranus," do not bear any style similarity to the Beatles, but they are fun to listen to.

"Sub Rosa Subway," is the song which has been played backwards to supposedly reveal to its listeners the phrase, "It's us, it's the Beatles." However, after several attempts to prove this, I still couldn't hear it.

OPENING SIDE two is "True Life Hero," a driving song which is the story of a person wishing he could be a hero, like a lifeguard or an astronaut. It features throbbing percussion and a singing lead guitar, provided by the strong composition of the song.

"Doctor Marvello," adds a touch of orchestration to the album and again demonstrates the group's strength of composition.

"Sir Bodsworth Rugglesby III," is a happy, airy song with raspy vocals. It sounds much like a song from a musical play.

A kind of "space" rock is the theme of "Little Neutrino," the closing song. It has a hard beat and the vocals are mechanically controlled to sound like a robot speaking.

Klaatu is not the Beatles, but it does have a good sound. The album shows the group members are true musicians and the delightful aspect of the album is its variety.

Instrumentals highlighted

'Animals' accents negative

By ROBERT C. MILLER
Collegian Reviewer

At a suggested retail price of $7.98, Pink Floyd's latest album, "Animals," is an expensive trip into the synthesized barnyard of the future. It is an album of cynical songs and depressing, dirge-like instrumentals.

Pink Floyd fans will still find some of the exotic synthesizer work which made "Dark Side of the Moon" a big success but the excellent saxophone on that album has been replaced by a rather hollow-sounding acoustic guitar.

Side one opens with a short little ditty about the boredom and pain of life. "Pigs on the Wing (Part One)" features the aforementioned acoustic guitar and a lead singer sounding rather like Bob Dylan. But the lyrics, sung with absolutely no emotion, quickly become bleak and depressing.

"Dogs," the other song on this side, is a lengthy number about the brutal nature of life in the business world. The lyrics are dreadfully true-to-life.

LUCKILY, there are some hauntingly beautiful instrumental passages which give this song some worth. The acoustic guitar is joined by a synthesizer and other instruments for a deeper, more complex sound.

Side two opens with the grunts of pigs skillfully mixed with some interesting synthesizer effects. However, as "Pigs (Three Different Ones)" continues, a harsh electric guitar joins in and the mood of side one is continued. The dull, brittle, grating electric guitar almost obscures the synthesizer sound which is a PF trademark.

"SHEEP" is a gory number that takes the listener into the dim world of a sheep and his final hours on Earth. An interesting opening of sheep-baaing in the field and other pasture sounds is overshadowed by oppressive guitar chords and shouted lyrics. The grinding, clanking sounds of the slaughterhouse are reproduced in full stereo.

Although the album is generally depressing throughout, the animal sounds and synthesizer effects make this album worth listening to—at least once.

'Bears' frankly portray American life

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Bad News Bears" will be shown at 7 and 9:30 p.m. tonight and Saturday night and at 7 p.m. Sunday in the Union Forum Theatre. Admission price is $1.25.

By ROBERT C. MILLER
Collegian Reviewer

"The Bad News Bears," with Walter Matthau and Tatum O'Neal, is a cynical portrait of suburban American life. This movie is frank to the point of being brutal as it lays open the seamy side of that great national pastime, little league baseball.

Matthau stars as a tired, old bachelor named Buttermaker, who once played minor league baseball. He tries to make a team out of a group of undersized misfits, who are referred to as "a bunch of Jews, spics, niggers and a booger-eating moron" by one of their own teammates.

With such material, Buttermaker is in for trouble. So, in between guzzling beers, he recruits an old friend, Amanda Whurlizer (Tatum O'Neal), to be his star pitcher.

Buttermaker stays drunk as his team of losers cuss, fight and play their way through the league.

Amanda's pitching is outstanding as the Bears try their darndest to win.

"THE BAD News Bears" is a realistic slice of Americana, albeit disconcerting. The coaches, including Buttermaker, are brutal. The parents are overbearing and the kids are kids—swearing a blue streak and playing their hearts out.

Vic Morrow gives a good supporting performance as the coach of the Yankees, arch-rivals of the Bears. He takes his job too seriously and in an attempt to win, alienates his son (Brandon Cruz) who is pitching for the Yankees.

Filed with all the finesse of a home movie, "The Bad News Bears" is none-the-less helped by the almost amateurish photography. It adds a further dimension of reality to the film.

AS MATTHAU tries to muddle through the rigors of the season while in an alcoholic daze, his team is alternately brilliant or lousy, depending on Amanda's performance.

While the movie pulls no punches, the humorous scenes are excellent. Matthau is superb as the wasted old ball player and Tatum O'Neal adds a special waif-like quality to her part as sassy Amanda.

The language of this movie may shock you, Buttermaker may disgust you and some scenes may anger you. But the determination and guts shown by the Bears will warm your heart.

Parker puts pink pleasing platter out

By RICHARD SITTS
Collegian Reviewer

What? Go out and buy a 45-r.p.m. record? A pink one to boot? You've got to be kidding!

No, we're not. This isn't just any pink 45. It is the latest release by Graham Parker and the Rumour, entitled, "Pink Parker."

Better hurry out and grab a copy, though. Only 10,000 of these little gems were pressed on pink vinyl. The rest will be pressed on that same dull black vinyl.

If you've got a turntable with a black rubber mat on it, you'll be amazed at the striking contrast this pink single will make. You'll find, as I have, it makes a great conversation piece.

And what's more, each side has two songs. That adds up to eleven minutes and 57 seconds of music.

THE OPENING cut, "Hold Back The Night," is alone worth the price of the single (only a buck). This cut is a classical destined to go down on the list of all-time great rock n' roll songs. Clocking in at just over three minutes, it makes one wish it went on forever. If you're like me, you'll find yourself wearing this side of the single out.

"(Let Me Get) Sweet On You" is a good rocker but almost seems pale in comparison to the previous cut.

Side two has two live songs which are also very good, "White Honey" and "Soul Shoes." These cuts, previously released on Parker's "Howling Wind" album are smooth, hard-driving numbers which will also be featured on Parker's "Live at Marble Arch" album which has yet to be released to the general public.

PARKER sounds remarkably close to Bruce Springsteen while maintaining a unique vocal style. This single will help ease the pain of those of us waiting for a new Springsteen product.

In these days of Bachman-Turner Overdrives, Peter Framptons and Queens, Graham Parker is producing, by far, some of the better rock n' roll to be heard anywhere.

Vega hops by Rabbit in mileage test

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a two-part series comparing economy cars. Today's article examines performance and gas mileage.

By RONN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

Performance and fuel economy in typical driving situations are of concern to potential small car buyers.

This is an evaluation of how the seven test cars performed on a 50-mile test loop around the Manhattan area. Since all cars tested were new and not broken in, gas mileage figures could be expected to later improve.

—TOYOTA COROLLA—
Although the Toyota Corolla may be the "The Answer" for reliable was marginally quicker than the Toyota.

To make up for its lack of quickness, the B-210 provides respectable fuel economy, registering 27.9 mpg on the test loop.

Handling is good with the Datsun, even with the standard Bridgestone bias ply tires. Steering is relatively light and the four-speed transmission is crisp and precise. Brakes are good, although the rear did tend to slide around slightly in panic stops.

Ride quality both in town and on the highway is firm, though not harsh.

—CHEVROLET VEGA— Chevrolet approaches the cubic inch) four-cylinder engine and gear ratios designed for optimum fuel economy. The Pinto managed 28.5 mpg on the test loop and acceleration was nearly identical to the Vega.

The Pinto's steering is relatively light, although the ratio seems rather slow. The four-speed transmission was a little stiff on the test car, especially on second-to-third gear shifts. Like the Vega, the Pinto's gear ratios allows most in-town driving to be done in first and second gears. A high fourth gear ratio helps keep engine noise low at highway speeds.

Quiet, smooth rides are a Ford tradition and the Pinto does its best to uphold that. Ride quality was smooth for a small car, with little harshness usually associated with a short wheel-base. Brakes and handling both received high marks. The test car's optional Firestone steel-belted radial tires were probably partly responsible for the above average handling and ride quality characteristics.

—SUBARU—Subaru offers another answer to the problem of economical transportation with its front-wheel drive sedan. The horizontally opposed 1600cc (97.6 cubic inch) four-cylinder engine will win few races, but provides adequate power for most types of driving. It achieved 26.5 mpg on the test loop and does not require unleaded gas.

Front-wheel drive cars have several advantages, including superior handling in adverse weather conditions. They do take a little getting used to, however. Steering seems slightly different from conventional front engine-rear drive cars and standard transmissions are imprecise. While the Subaru's steering is fairly light the four-speed transmission is slightly vague.

The Subaru's ride is firm, both in town and on the highway. With the help of the Bridgestone steel-belted radials, handling is good. The engine is also loud, especially at high rpm. The optional five-speed overdrive would help reduce noise at highway speeds. Brakes in the test car provided good control in panic stops.

—HONDA CIVIC—The front-wheel drive Honda Civic CVCC, with a 1488cc (90.8 cubic inch) engine, offered peppy performance and excellent fuel economy. The Civic, which doesn't require unleaded gasoline, managed 33 mpg on the test loop.

Steering in the Honda is light and precise. The four-speed transmission is imprecise but not hard to get used to. Brakes and handling are good, but could probably be improved with radial tires.

The Civic's ride is fair, tending to be slightly choppy at times.

—VOLKSWAGEN RABBIT—
Another entry in the front-wheel drive economy car market is the Volkswagen Rabbit. The test car, equipped with a 1588cc (97 cubic inch) engine and automatic transmission, achieved 26.9 mpg on the test loop. The Rabbit doesn't require unleaded gasoline.

The Rabbit was the only car tested with automatic transmission and the automatic did its job well, with smooth, precise shifts. Its major flaw was a significant amount of vibration when the car was at idle with the transmission in gear. This vibration ceased when the transmission was shifted into park or neutral.

Handling is good in the Rabbit and the brakes offer good control in panic stops. Steering is light and precise. The Michelin ZX radials on the test car were an asset to the ride and handling.

The ride was good with little harshness at any speed.

Front wheel drive cars have several advantages, including superior handling.

and economical transportation, it isn't a "fast" answer. The small 1200cc (73 cubic inch) four-cylinder engine makes the car one of the slowest non-diesel cars around.

The car is designed for economical operation, not neck-snapping performance, and in this the car succeeds. Gas mileage on the test loop was 32.5 miles per gallon (mpg).

The Corolla's handling is good under most conditions. Steering is light and the four-speed transmission is precise. Brakes are good, although the front end "nose-dive" associated with hard braking takes some getting used to. The standard Dunlop bias ply tires used on the test car are adequate, but radials would probably improve handling and ride quality.

Around town, the Corolla's ride is firm and even slightly harsh on rough surfaces. At highway speeds, the ride is firm but comfortable.

—DATSUN B-210—With a 1397cc (85.2 cubic inch) four-cylinder engine, the Datsun B-210 mechanical side of the economy car market in a slightly different way, using a relatively large 2300 cc (140 cubic inch) four-cylinder engine and gear ratios designed for optimum gas mileage. As a result, the Vega gains some quickness and still managed to achieve 28.4 mpg on the test loop.

Light steering and a precise four-speed transmission help make driving the Vega easy. Gear ratios are such that most in-town driving can be done in first and second gears. At highway speeds, the high fourth gear ratio helps keep engine noise low. Brakes are adequate, providing good control in panic stops. Radial tires to replace the standard Goodyear bias ply tires would be an option worthy of consideration.

The Vega's ride is firm, both in town and on the highway. The engine is noisy under hard acceleration but quieter at cruising speeds.

—FORD PINTO—The Ford Pinto approaches the problem of economical transportation similar to the Vega, using a 2300cc (140

Legislature receives executive criticism, Dry Force praise

WICHITA (AP)—Republican Gov. Robert Bennett has criticized the Kansas legislature for its "sorry" performance during the 1977 session. And Democratic Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider fired his own shot at the "do-nothing" legislature.

But one group believes lawmakers did just fine during the just ended session—The Kansas United Dry Forces.

"The 1977 legislature rejected all measures that would promote increased alcohol consumption and suffering," a letter by the group's board of directors said. "Those who have experienced alcohol-related misery are especially appreciative of your action."

COPIES of the letter went to every member of the Kansas House and Senate.

The board said it was pleased with the legislature's action in taking the state three per cent sales tax off prescription drugs and funding alcoholism treatment by increasing the gallonage tax on liquor and beer.

The Dry Forces said they were happy the session also rejected pari-mutual gambling, saying "enough people are swindled with bingo."

"Kansas is fortunate to have a majority of lawmakers who believe the health and welfare of the public is more important than profit for recreational drug pushers and gambling promoters," it said.

Muffins massacre midnight munchies

Ah, controversy. For some reason, hamburgers are less than controversial. I did receive some feedback on the issue—a coupon personally addressed to Resident, for a buy-one-get-one-free. Now that is disgusting.

There are only two more installments of Creative Cooking for this semester and the continuation of this clever column is up in the air, depending upon two factors.

THE FIRST known is—will I return to school next fall? I have accepted a position as a waiter at a resort in the Ozarks for the summer. If the stories are true wicked women, an overabundance of alcohol, other recreational vices and the lure of fresh cat fish then the chances of my survival, let alone my return, are doubtful.

The other factor involved is determining the usefulness of this column. If you tried the recipes and for some reason they worked, more power to you.

There is no way I can compete with the blitzkrieg of fastfood advertisers. From my observations, K-State is a convenience food community. Those who do spend time in the kitchen are a quiet minority. It is those people I have tried to reach, successfully, I hope.

TO CLARIFY the honey controversy, follow these directions. Use two-thirds cup of honey for each cup of sugar called for and deduct about three tablespoons of liquid from the recipe—do not deduct the liquid in bread. Also in baked goods, add ½ teaspoon of soda for every cup subbed. And finally reduce the oven temperature by 25 degrees and bake a little longer.

The following recipe is dedicated to those diehards who crave for the perfect English muffin. English muffins are the perfect medium for any early morning—late night—deepdown craving.

ENGLISH MUFFINS:

1 cup milk, scalded
2 tablespoons honey
¼ cup butter, oil, or margarine
1 tablespoon salt
1 cup warm water (105-115 degrees)
1 package dry yeast
5-6 cups flour (½ white, half whole wheat) corn meal

Place hot milk in a large bowl and add oil, honey and salt. Cool to lukewarm. Dissolve the yeast in the water and add to the cooled milk. Add three cups of flour and beat until smooth. Gradually add more flour, beating well until a soft dough is formed. Knead the dough 10 to 12 minutes.

PLACE in a greased bowl, cover the top and allow to rise until doubled in bulk (about one hour). Punch down and divide in half. On a lightly floured board, roll the first half out to about ½-inch thick and cut as many circles of dough as possible. An old tuna can is quite useful for the cutting.

Gently remove to a cookie sheet that has been heavily sprinkled with corn meal. Combine the rest of the scraps and the rest of the dough until all the dough is cut into muffin shape. Cover and let rise until doubled.

Heat a griddle or fry pan to moderately hot (about 300 degrees) and grease lightly. Place muffins on the griddle, baking until the bottoms are browned (about 12 minutes) turn and bake the other side.

In next week's column I plan a gala edition of recipes designed to alter the perceptions of over-worked college students. What could be more worthwhile than a column devoted to alcohol during dead week.

Grocery, utility prices expected to rise

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sharply rising farm and fuel prices pushed over-all wholesale prices up 1.1 per cent in April for the second straight month, almost assuring consumers of higher grocery and utility bills.

The April increase, reported Thursday by the Labor Department, equaled the March rise and followed a nine-tenths of one per cent jump in February.

THE WHOLESALE increases have been matched by large increases in consumer prices this year, raising fears of accelerating inflation.

Consumer prices rose at a 10 per cent annual rate in the first quarter, compared to 4.8 per cent in all of 1976. But Carter administration economists, while expressing disappointment, said there was no evidence of runaway inflation on the horizon.

Bert Lance, director of the Office of Management and Budget, told reporters, "It is always serious when you see that kind of an increase" but he said it was fortunate that the boost was no larger than the one in March.

Lance said it was difficult "to tell how much effect energy and cold weather had to do with this trend" and that this would not be clear for another month.

Jack Meyer, assistant director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, said: "It's disappointing and clearly a bite on the consumer's pocketbook, but I don't think it's an indicator that we're headed for double-digit inflation."

MEYER and Courtenay Slater, the Commerce Department's chief economist, noted that farm prices were largely to blame and continued to increase at about a six per cent annual wholesale rate, the range regarded by most economists as the nation's underlying inflation rate.

Changes in industrial prices play a much larger role in determining the over-all rate of inflation than do farm and food prices, which often fluctuate wildly throughout the year even though the government tries to adjust for normal seasonal ups and downs.

Industrial prices rose six-tenths of a per cent in April, following an eight-tenths per cent rise in March and February's six-tenths per cent pace.

Wildcats tangle with alumni

Not since Mack Herron and Isaac Jackson has K-State football enjoyed the luxury of a quality breakaway back, but if the Wildcats' 1977 spring games are any indication, K-State has one or two on the horizon.

K-State fans will get their first good look at the talents of Mack Green and Ray Butler, Saturday, when the varsity tangles with the K-State alumni at 1:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium.

Green, a 5-9, 170-pound transfer from Coffeyville Junior College, and Butler, a 6-2, 200-pound transfer from Mesa (Ariz.) Juco have been the talk of spring workouts—and for good reasons.

"They are looking good," said Ellis Rainsberger, who admits he went into spring drills looking for speedy tailbacks. "Both have given us an added aspect we haven't had for quite awhile—game busting plays."

GREEN HAD runs of 93, 28 and 21 yards last Saturday enroute to a 22-carry, 209-yard day. He's averaged better than eight yards per carry this spring.

Sports

Butler enjoyed his second straight 100-yard-plus day Saturday and darted 50 yards for a score.

And they haven't been the only ones racking up yards in K-State's improved offense. Swingback Tony Brown has averaged nearly six yards per carry in three outings, and fullback Roosevelt has totalled 280 yards in 59 carries.

Rainsberger said he hopes to team Green and Butler with K-State's No. 1 quarterback, Wendell Henrikson, against the Old Timers, but there's no certainty that will happen. The diminutive Henrikson, who revved up the Cats offense in 1976 with his passing, has been sidelined for two weeks with a pulled hamstring.

"If Wendell is healthy, he will play," Rainsberger said.

WILDCATS FANS will get a look at another transfer, Malo Eteuni, a 6-3, 270-pound offensive guard, who Rainsberger said is "making tremendous progress, week after week." Eteuni is expected to add to the Wildcats' experienced offensive line.

The alumni roster includes Mike Creed, Bill Brittain, John Duckers, Tim Wasemiller, Fred Rothwell, Danny Lankas, Mo Latimore, John Stucky, Johnny Robertson and player-coaches Mike Kuhn and Dennis Morrison—to name a few.

The game, which ends K-State's spring drills, will be a three-quarter affair with the varsity units taking over in an intrasquad tussle the final 15 minutes. Tickets are $2 for adults and $1 for students.

K-State's varsity prevailed a year ago, 32-14.

Thinclads take on Jayhawks

Kansas' superiority in the sprints and field events and its overall depth tags the Jayhawks as decided favorites in the 42nd K-State-Kansas outdoor track dual here Saturday.

The meet, at K-State's Ward Haylett Track, begins at 4 p.m. with field events. The running programs start at 4:45 p.m.

"We're just too young to meet them head-on in a dual meet," said track coach Mike Ross in assessing his squad's chances against KU, the defending conference indoor and outdoor champs.

Kansas won 12 of 18 events a year ago en route to a 94-59 victory, the Jayhawks 31st in the series.

Returning 1976 winners are K-State's Bob Prince (880) and Darryl Bennett (triple jump), and KU's Anthony Coleman (120 hurdles) and Steve Rainbolt (high jump).

Women's track team looks to beat ISU

This year's women's Big Eight Track Championships at Lawrence Friday and Saturday could turn out to be more than the traditional two-team race between three-time defending champion Iowa State and three-time runner-up K-State.

"There's definitely more quality throughout than in past years," said coach Barry Anderson. "This year for the first time every school has individuals capable of winning at least one event."

But Anderson admits once again Iowa State must be considered the pre-meet favorite, with the Cats, Nebraska and Colorado regarded as challengers.

"If Iowa State doesn't have a good day we could beat them," Anderson said, "but if we don't have a good day Nebraska or Colorado could beat us."

ANDERSON SAID he sees several possibilities for individual K-State titles including the 1,500-meter run, the 100 and 200-yard dashes and the discus and shot put.

Heading the Cats in the 1,500 will be junior standout Renee

Urish, the Burlingame product who posted the best collegiate time of the year for that distance at Drake last weekend with a third place time of 4:19.3.

Urish won both the half-mile and mile in last year's competition at Ames, Iowa, but she'll pass in the 800-meter running this weekend to compete in her first 3,000-meter event.

Last year's 100-yard dash champion, Jan Smith, tops K-State's entries in the sprints after running a 24.0 split on the Cats' 880-medley relay at Drake.

"Jan is running very well again after suffering a setback in our dual meet with Kearney State (Neb.) about three weeks ago," Anderson said. "I look for her to do well this weekend."

Freshman Christy Tumberger and sophomore Linda Long will carry K-State's hopes in the shot put and discus.

Tumberger has the best throws to date of any of the entries in both events while Long ranks second in the discus and third in the shot put.

Wildcats sign 6-3 Freeman

Thomas Freeman, the all-everything guard from Lynwood, Calif., has signed a basketball letter-of-intent to K-State.

The 6-3, 175-pound Freeman was a member of virtually every Southern California prep all-star team the past three years and a high school all-American his junior and senior years. He finished his illustrious career at Lynwood High School as the fourth-leading scorer and second-leading rebounder in Southern California Interscholastic Federation history.

Freeman averaged 23.7 points and 12 rebounds per contest in 1976-77 and shot 58 per cent from the field.

"We're delighted that Thomas has chosen K-State," said Wildcat coach Jack Hartman. "He is one of the premier players in the nation. He's a classic shooter."

K-STATE'S FOURTH 1977 recruit gained all-California Interscholastic Federation first team honors three times (his freshman, junior and senior years). In 1974, he became the first freshman in 38 years to be named to the all-CIF squad.

Freeman was all-league selection four times, all Los Angeles three times, all-Southeast four times and he made the all-tournament team in every tourney he played in during four years of high school ball.

Freeman was also heavily recruited by UCLA, USC, and Maryland. He joins earlier K-State signees 6-7 Brent Murphy of Clinton, Iowa, 6-5 Rolando Blackman of Brooklyn, N.Y. and 6-11 Greg Prudhoe of Peoria, Ill.

A B-plus student, Freeman plans to major in business at K-State.

In other K-State cage news Thursday, Hartman announced that Lon Kruger will serve as the Wildcat's graduate assistant coach next season and that Darryl Winston will serve as student-coach while completing his undergraduate degree.

Kruger, twice Big Eight Player-of-the-Year (1973-1974) at K-State, was an assistant basketball coach at Pittsburg State (Kan.) this past year. Winston, a three-year regular for the Cats, averaged 10.3 points per game in helping K-State to the Big Eight title in 1977.

Royals beat White Sox

KANSAS CITY (AP)—George Brett, Hal McRae and Amos Otis had two hits apiece and Mark Littell notched his fourth save with strong late-inning relief pitching to help the Kansas City Royals beat the Chicago White Sox 6-5 Thursday night.

Brett cracked a double off his brother, Chicago starter Ken Brett, in the sixth to score Fred Patek with the Royals' final run. Ken Brett, 3-2, gave up 10 hits in six and two-third innings.

Montreal defeats Islanders, 2-1

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP)—Two goals by Bob Gainey—the first coming after just seven seconds of play—carried the Montreal Canadiens to a 2-1 triumph Thursday night over the New York Islanders, sending the Canadiens into the National Hockey League playoff finals.

Montreal won the best-of-seven semifinal series four games to two and will meet the Boston Bruins at Montreal to decide the Stanley Cup championship.

KU names new coach

LAWRENCE (AP)—Lafayette Norwood, a Wichita high school coach, was named an assistant basketball coach at the University of Kansas Thursday and his first job will be to recruit his star pupil.

"One of his first jobs will be to recruit Darnell Valentine. We expect he will do it energetically," a KU spokesman said.

He said Norwood, the head basketball coach at Wichita Heights the past eight years, was to report in Lawrence May 28 "but his recruiting duties start immediately."

"I'm going to go after Darnell, but I'm not sure I'm going to get him," Norwood said in Wichita.

Valentine, a 6-1 guard who was named a high school all-American after leading Wichita Heights to a 23-0 record and the Class 5A championship, has been the object of an intense recruiting battle.

Dean Smith, head coach at North Carolina, has been trying to land Valentine, whom he called the best defensive guard in the country. Smith said Wednesday that Norwood's anticipated move could affect Valentine's decision.

Norwood, 42, has a 112-56 record at Wichita Heights. He will fill one of the openings left by the resignation of KU's two basketball assistants—Sam Miranda and Duncan Reid.

Gray Panther battles old age myths

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

Nadine Burch refuses to surrender to old age. In fact, the 67-year-old University For Man (UFM) consultant advocate acknowledges her age only in passing.

Burch, a widow for 20 years and mother of two, says the secret to preserving a youthful outlook on life is to keep learning. She does that by participating in K-State home economics classes dealing with problems of the elderly.

THE OUTSPOKEN woman is an active member in the Gray Panther organization—a national group of young and old people who work to promote human rights. She joined the organization two years ago.

Burch was forced into early retirement at 57 because of arthritis while she was working in a Topeka psychiatric nursing department.

"It was very traumatic, because I was good at my job," she said. "For about a year I floated around, trying to find out what I'm going to do."

Burch moved to Manhattan to attend K-State. The next few years she spent performing odd jobs including a two-year stint as a housemother at Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house.

BURCH... works as lecturer.

She then worked as a nutrition site manager and resident hostess at Apartment Towers nursing home.

BURCH said she began to see what discrimination the old are up against.

"I've been in civil rights, women's movements, and then all of a sudden I realized I'm a minority and I'm getting it," she said.

"There's no way to know what it's like to be old until you're old. You can try to understand and have empathy, but you can't know unless you're there."

Burch aims much of her criticisms at stereotypes of elderly persons.

"My most important function is to blast these anywhere and everywhere I can," she said.

Burch lectures part-time in UFM classes and works as a traveling lecturer nationwide. She will speak this June in Boston about problems of the elderly.

Burch said people are designed to become obsolete—"no deposit no return"—as they grow older. She said this contributes to depression, a condition she says is prevalent among the old.

SHE LISTED four major problems the old face; loss of dignity, money, inadequate medical services and a sense of unwant.

"When you retire you lose your role identity (and) much of your status and half your income is gone," she said.

Burch decided to broaden awareness about problems of the poor by applying as a K-State consultant advocate through the Manhattan Area Vocational Technical school. The going was rough at first.

"The first interview was a disaster," she said. "The interviewer said he doesn't train anybody over 60 because it's not profitable."

Eventually, after pressure exerted upon the school's administrators by her friends, Burch was accepted into the training program.

"From then on I got anything and everything I wanted," she said, flashing a triumphant smile.

Art, antiques to be auctioned for scholarships

A variety of art items and antiques will be exhibited and auctioned Saturday and Sunday outside of West Stadium. Proceeds will go to the K-State art department scholarship fund.

"The main source of money we raise to be given to the scholarship fund comes from the Spring Arts and Crafts Fair. It is really a scholarship fair. Last year we raised $1,500," said Pat Hagen, assistant art instructor and coordinator of the fair.

Saturday the fair will start at 10 a.m. and continue to 4 p.m. The main features will include crafts, caricatures, demonstrations, finger painting and fishing booths.

Hagen said that art work by K-State students and faculty will be displayed as well as art contributed by former faculty members and some professional artists from around the country. Leon Hicks and Michael Nushawg are two of the featured professional artists.

"People from the community, merchants, and just about anybody who has been connected with K-State in the past have given us things for the fair and the auction," Hagen said.

Prior to the auction, which will start at 2 Sunday afternoon, the art to be auctioned will be exhibited inside West Stadium. Exhibit hours will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. to 2 a.m. Sunday.

In addition to the art, a man's watch and a woman's silver and turquoise watch band will be auctioned.

Meany to speak at teachers rally

KANSAS CITY (AP)—George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, will be the main speaker at a rally which labor has called for this morning in support of union teachers and their seven-week strike against the Kansas City School District.

Don Waterman, executive secretary of Kansas City's Central Labor Council, said participants will be bused downtown from six staging and parking areas and some will march. He estimated the crowd will be 20,000.

The rally will start at 10 a.m. in front of the Jackson County Courthouse, where two teachers are serving contempt of court sentences rather than pay fines or return to work.

Sun dance begins energy fair today

The Manhattan Community Development Department and local residents are sponsoring an energy fair today and Saturday in the Manhattan City Auditorium.

The fair, which is devoted to energy conservation, begins with a sun dance at noon today. Other activities continue until 6 p.m. Saturday's events begin at 9 a.m. and conclude at 6 p.m.

The fair will include exhibits on alternative energy devices and do-it-yourself means of energy conservation. Displays will be set up by individuals, businesses, governmental units and school children.

Manhattan's Energy Demonstration Program displays include a backyard shed for solar hot water, a solar greenhouse, solar window-box heaters, solar food dryers and ovens and insulating devices for windows and glass doors.

Tours of solar heated homes in the Manhattan area also will be provided.

The fair is free and open to the public.

twelve foot redwood play structure.

Complete with double slide, three-person tire swing and tricycle storage space, the structure gives children a chance to develop a sense of socialization, said Frank Locker, instructor in architecture.

Locker and several Design II students started the project a year ago. During winter intersession the students pre-fabricated the parts and then built the structure this spring in three days, Locker said.

IVALEE McCORD, professor of family and child development and supervisor of the lab, said she had tried for three or four years to get new equipment.

"I wanted a structure that would involve the children in dramatic play and cooperative play. It was something I wanted before I retire," McCord said.

Both McCord and Locker said that extensive research and study of the children's play habits was involved.

"We looked for what was lacking in the other structures," Locker said. "For instance, a two-person slide to promote socialization and a three-person tire swing instead of a one-person swing."

"We also designed the structure to fit into the site it was to be built on. We also wanted it to contrast with the other structures in the yard."

LOCKER SAID they wanted a structure which all children could play on, even the smaller children who hadn't developed their climbing abilities.

The structure, which can be modified if necessary, has already had a handrail added. If it were made of metal it would be harder to make changes, he said.

The Topeka YWCA has contacted Locker about a similar play structure. Dick Tilgham, junior in architecture who is from Topeka, will be helping Locker design the structure for the YWCA this summer.

Stolen glassware raises beer price

By BILL STAUFFER
Collegian Reporter

The price of beer is at an all time high and the many people who've stocked their shelves with glassware from the taverns are to blame, according to some Aggieville bar managers.

"Stolen glassware is a major expense," said Steve Dunaway, manager of Kites, an Aggieville bar.

"The price of a pitcher is a dollar and a stein is 50 cents and a pitcher glass is 25 cents, all without beer," Dunaway said.

"We lose between $1,200 and $1,300 a year due to theft and breakage," said Don Ramey, owner of Dark Horse Tavern.

JIM HOOVER, owner of Hoov's and Steve Kaup, manager of Auntie Mae's—both in Aggieville—also said the theft of glassware is a serious problem to the taverns. Because of this both taverns pass out plastic cups instead of glasses when selling pitchers at night.

"We would like to pass out glasses but we just can't afford the expense," Kaup said.

Most bar managers said the majority of the thefts occur during the fall. This is when people steal the glasses to stock their apartments, dorms and homes the managers said.

The weekends of football and basketball games are ripe for thefts because people from out of town come in and steal glasses for their home. The taverns try to have a person at the door on busy weekends but even that is not enough many times, they said.

"People can be prosecuted for stealing glassware but we never have because we haven't felt that thefts have reached that great a problem," Dunaway said.

MOST TAVERN managers said when someone is caught stealing glassware they are just asked to give the glass back. If the problem continues the person isn't served at the tavern anymore.

"People complain about the cost of beer but the expenses have sky rocketed," Dunaway said. "Glassware is one of the major expenses along with labor and utilities."

"People will steal anything. They will steal anything that isn't nailed down," Ramey said. "We have even had someone try and steal a chair."

Kites has several legal ways people can acquire glassware. One is where a person can buy a glass of beer and then keep the glass. Another is whenever a pitcher is chipped the pitcher is placed at the end of the bar and anyone can come in and take it. Kites and Dark Horse Tavern will sell glasses and pitchers to the public.

Snell resigns council post; budget OK'd

Robert Snell resigned as chairman of the Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC) Friday, effective June 30.

The IAC also approved K-State's 1977-78 athletic budget during its regular monthly meeting.

Snell, who has served as chairman since May 1975, said he felt it was time to concentrate his energies on his position as head of the Department of Civil Engineering.

"This has been an interesting and rewarding two years," Snell said. "However, my principal interests are in civil engineering. For several reasons this seems an appropriate time to move my efforts in that direction."

"The athletic department at K-State is now on solid financial footing," he said. "The program clearly has the support of the administration faculty, students, alumni and friends of the University."

AT THE REQUEST of K-State President Duane Acker, Snell will remain as an ex-officio member of the IAC and as the K-State faculty representative to the Big Eight Conference and the NCAA.

"Dr. Snell has done a tremendous job as chairperson of the IAC. He deserves and has my respect and appreciation and that of many, many others associated with K-State and the athletic program," Acker said.

Kerry Patrick, IAC student member, said he regretted Snell's decision, but added Snell deserved a lot of credit.

"President Acker and Dr. Snell deserve real credit for the work they've done these past two years," Patrick said. "Without their efforts and tough decisions (such as the Barrett decision), we would not have a viable program."

"For all practical purposes at the end of this year, we're going to be out of debt," Patrick said. "We're on our way up and things are looking brighter."

ACKER SAID Snell led the IAC through a difficult period and accomplished much.

"We have improved our financial status, strengthened our financial procedures, improved student and faculty attitudes toward athletics and solved the Athletic Residence Hall financial situation," he said. "We also have made significant progress toward equal opportunity for women that Title IX requires and that society deems appropriate."

Acker is expected to appoint a new chairman soon.

The athletic budget, which came up for approval a month ago, was amended with an increase in the proposed income. Next year's projected income is $2.32 million, instead of the $2.2 million originally expected when the budget was figured.

Patrick said the increase came about because $25,000 more in contributions is expected; there was a miscalculation in last month's budget; $17,000 more in state funds is expected and the Big 8 surplus will be more than anticipated.

Panel disappointed with legislature

Area lawmakers Saturday termed the recently completed session of the Kansas Legislature confusing and expressed disappointment at the K-State budget appropriations for next fiscal year.

State Senator Donn Everett and Representatives John Stites, Denny Burgess and Ivan Sand summarized the legislative session at a Manhattan Chamber of Commerce Eggs and Issues breakfast.

Stites, Burgess and Sand emphasized the effectiveness of Barry Flinchbaugh, special assistant to K-State President Duane Acker, at the legislative sessions.

Burgess expressed disappointment that the legislature cut K-State's $50,000 proposal for a computerized power management system.

Flinchbaugh said the system was to have been used in six campus buildings and could automatically turned off power in rooms during hours when classes were not held.

"About all the legislature did was respond to the governor's programs," he said. "There were no programs of their own. I only remember one that didn't come from the governor."

Four bills passed early in the session were amended later, Stites said. He called that action poor and said the legislators should think bills out more thoroughly before passing them.

The session demonstrated "a broad lack of vision" and did not seriously address the major problems of the state, Everett said.

Energy conservation progress equalled a "big fat zero," he said, adding, "We've got to change our lifestyle."

Everett said the state must answer how much Kansas can and should grow in becoming an industrial rather than agriculturally dependent state.

The upcoming gubernatorial race was a topic for the legislators.

The governor has a serious image problem and will have to resurrect himself in the next year, Everett said.

Dead week comprehensives illegal

By DAVE KAUP
Collegian Reporter

Examinations covering the final portion of a course are allowed during dead week, but comprehensive final exams are not.

"All final examinations that are comprehensive must be given during the time that they are scheduled during final examination week," said John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs.

A DEAD WEEK policy was reaffirmed last year by Faculty Senate allowing only hour exams during dead week. The senate set aside dead week as a "period of curtailed social activity." Dead week policy of the late 1950s prohibited all University social activities.

Academics come first during dead week, Chalmers said. Students are encouraged to "clear the decks for final week," he said.

"It (dead week) is not a policy, but it is an event that occurs every year. It's a custom," said Carole Francq, chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee of Faculty Senate. "It's not a policy, so it's not mandatory."

Chalmers views the Faculty Senate guidelines as University policy.

"I'm not a policeman. I don't make policy, I administer it," Chalmers said. "Nobody has authority except Faculty Senate to give exceptions to the rules," he said. "When violations are brought to my attention, I take care of them."

IF A STUDENT complains about an instructor giving a final exam during dead week, Chalmers contacts the dean of the instructor's college. Chalmers said he receives two or three complaints a semester about exam policy violations. The policy applies to both tenured and non-tenured faculty, Chalmers said.

Faculty Senate is concerned that instructors don't move finals to an earlier time, Chalmers said. Final exams are scheduled by the Office of Admissions and Records.

"Dead week is dead in name only," Chalmers said, unlike the campus of the '50s when it was dead socially and in everything but academics, he said.

Cement boats don't all float

Solar power for homes is fair topic

Small-scale, energy-saving solar projects designed for home use were the focus of the Manhattan energy fair Friday and Saturday.

The fair displayed devices such as solar water heaters, solar windowbox heaters and solar food dryers which were developed and built since the beginning of the energy project last November.

"The purpose of the project was to make the community aware of the potential of solar power and to increase the community's awareness of the country's energy problems," said Marvin Butler, director of Manhattan community development.

"The projects are small—we couldn't effectively look at large scale projects like solar panels because they're too big and too expensive. We wanted to develop small projects that could be made and used by the homeowner at a minimum cost. The largest project was a solar greenhouse."

WORK ON the projects was done by K-State faculty and students, high school and grade school students, individuals and organizations in the area.

"One interesting aspect of the fair is that it involved a lot of different people and different methods," said Randy Pierce, one coordinator of the project. "Many of the projects can be built with available skills and materials—they don't involve exotic materials or technology. Most are projects the average homeowner can do."

Although no definite plans have been made, Butler said he would like to see some of the projects used on a city housing project.

"I would like to attach some of the devices and see what kind of results we get," Butler said. "This could serve as a pilot for future solar heating and cooling of public housing units."

The projects will be displayed at city hall for some time and may be made available later to other cities for demonstration, Butler said. Information about construction and use of the solar devices will be available in the Manhattan community development office.

The Collegian incorrectly reported Friday that Nadine Burch applied as a K-State consultant advocate through the Manhattan Area Vocational Technical School. She applied at the vocational rehabilitation center and was certified through K-State to work as a consultant advocate.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question:

How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer:

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: If a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question:

Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer:

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question:

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer:

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question:

If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer:

Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES—Patricia Hearst was described by her lawyer as "very apprehensive" as she faces sentencing on robbery and assault charges of up to a possible 15½-year-to-life prison sentence today.

Hearst spent the Mother's Day weekend at her parents' Hillsborough home in Northern California with her sisters who flew in from New England, her attorney Al Johnson said.

Since her release from prison last November, the newspaper heiress has been living with her parents, Randolph and Catherine Hearst, who hired a platoon of private security guards to protect their daughter around the clock.

Johnson's only comment on his 23-year-old client's mood was "very apprehensive."

The judge who will sentence Hearst, has wide discretion in setting the penalty. He could give her as much as 15½-years-to-life or as little as probation.

TOKYO—A crew member swinging a fire axe subdued a would-be hijacker Sunday who tried to force a U.S.-bound Northwest Airlines jumbo jet with 261 persons aboard to Moscow, authorities said.

The incident occurred aboard the Boeing 747 about an hour after it left Tokyo for Honolulu, an airline spokesman said.

He said the would-be hijacker was injured, but his condition was not immediately known. No other injuries were reported.

The man, identified as Bruce Trayer, a United States citizen, "apparently had taken a stewardess hostage with a razor, holding it at her throat," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman John Leyden in Washington. "His only demand was to go to Moscow."

Minutes later, Leyden said, "the pilot advised that the hijacker had been subdued with a fire axe and the aircraft was returning to Tokyo at the advice of a doctor on board because of injuries to the hijacker."

COFFEYVILLE—A plane had apparently crashed near this southeastern Kansas community—but the distress signal it emitted kept moving around.

The signal first hit the air about 11 a.m. Saturday from the Elk City area. But as various authorities—including a Civil Air Patrol plane—took up the search, it moved. Then it moved again. And again.

More persons joined the effort to find the downed plane including a man from the Kansas Fish and Wildlife Department, another from the Kansas Highway Patrol, deputies from Oklahoma and private citizens with multi-band radios.

It was Lee Bynam, an Independence police detective, who finally tracked the problem to a Missouri Pacific railroad car.

The distress signal was part of a load of airplane parts that had been shipped to Coffeyville. It had gone off accidentally.

WASHINGTON—Women seeking intrauterine birth control devices must be given an easily understood brochure explaining the risks and uses of IUDs, the Food and Drug Administration announced Sunday.

The regulation, which takes effect Nov. 7, also will establish uniform labeling for all types of IUDs.

The FDA estimated that the devices, sometimes called coils, are used by three million women in the United States. They are inserted into the uterus and inhibit conception.

The FDA in 1970 began requiring that women who take birth-control pills be given special information on the pills' risks and benefits.

Farmer's gun grab cause of killings

LINCOLN, Kan. (AP) — The Saturday killing of three farm family members may have been motivated by the farmer's attempt to grab an unloaded shotgun to bluff the intruder, said Lincoln County Sheriff Don Panzer Sunday.

"Something triggered something," Panzer said. "We're speculating he tried to grab for a shotgun. It just didn't work."

The sheriff said the unloaded shotgun was found on a chair near where Leonard Wiebke's body was found. Funeral services are Wednesday in Lincoln for Wiebke, his wife and their youngest son, Terry, 18.

THE KILLER, John Steward, 26, fled St. Louis Friday after allegedly shooting a woman to death. Authorities said he took his own life with a .38 caliber pistol after shooting the Wiebkes with a .22 pistol. Panzer said Mrs. Wiebke was shot in the chest and the head and the other two were each shot once in the head.

Steward had fled to the Wiebke farmhouse during a police chase which began after an officer recognized that Steward may have been the man sought in the St. Louis slaying of Yvonne Robinson, 33.

Panzer, who negotiated with Steward through a radio-telephone relay, said he was "easy to talk to," but added, "we knew he was kind of a mental type."

Steward was told that he could use the Wiebke car to flee if the hostages were released unhurt. Panzer said under the circumstances, all the officers surrounding the home could do was wait.

"He never threatened to kill these people," Panzer said. "We were fully convinced that he was going to take their car and leave."

PANZER SAID no shots were heard by officers stationed outside the house. He said officers were hampered by the Wiebkes' pigs, which kept banging the lids on their metal feeders, making noises like gunshots.

"If they did hear anything they just thought it was the pig feeders," Panzer said.

When nothing was heard from the house for over an hour, officers rushed the house and found all four dead.

Evaluations merit more consideration

Each semester at about dead week time, students are asked to fill out computerized evaluations of their instructors.

The evaluation system has been criticized as being inadequate and unreliable. But despite its shortcomings, students owe it to the instructor and future students to take ten minutes to thoughtfully answer all of the questions.

In filling out the forms, students should be aware of the impact the results have on the instructor.

One instructor came close to losing his job in the fall 1975 semester because a 10-student class unfavorably evaluated him, though all his other classes gave him favorable evaluations.

COLLEGE COUNCILS pay a lot of attention to evaluation results and may recommend an instructor's dismissal on the basis of a single class evaluation.

Obviously, many classes are simply not relevant to the questions on the forms. In such cases, the student should note this on the appropriate question as well as on the back of the computer card. If the questions do not allow students to fairly judge the instructors' performances, they should note that on the answer card.

Only instructors who are being considered for reappointment must be evaluated by their students. All tenured faculty, however, can volunteer to be evaluated. Regardless of whether the evaluation is mandatory, however, all instructors deserve a fair and well-thought out evaluation by their students.

INSTRUCTOR evaluations aren't the sole criteria for rehiring teachers. They are, however, student input and as such play an important role in determining whether a college council decides to recommend rehiring an instructor or recommending dismissal.

One question on the evaluation asks how much consideration the student gave to the questions. Students should always give very careful consideration to all questions on the form.

If a student doesn't like the way questions are worded on the questionnaire, he should note that. If the questions apply to the course, he should answer them fairly.

THE FACT that many instructors save a day for the evaluations and dismiss class after the forms are completed is no signal for the students to whip through the form and scramble out of class as soon as possible.

All students should spend extra time with the form and give some consideration to each question—you may have that same instructor again.

Censorship erodes rights

Human rights are like muscles. Both must be regularly exercised or they begin to deteriorate. It's also sometimes necessary to push them both to their limits if they are to remain firm and strong.

Freedom of expression is a basic human right. Recently that freedom has come under attack from people with good motives but poor judgment.

The attacks have been disguised as attempts to clean up public morals by banning allegedly pornographic movies and books.

At K-State the film "Immoral Tales" was almost cancelled because some people believed it was in poor taste.

The original decision not to show the film was appropriately greeted with dissent by many students and faculty members. Later it was decided the film would be shown to season ticket holders and it was eventually shown to the general public.

THE WAY the film was handled at K-State was a disgrace. Because of the original decision to ban the film, "Immoral Tales" received much more prior publicity than any of the good movies which have come to K-State this year.

As a result, when the film was finally shown, it was viewed by sell-out audiences. Most people did not come to see the film; they came to see what people were trying to "protect" them from and to see if the film would get busted. It's a shame the film didn't have more to recommend it.

Once "Immoral Tales" was booked, it should have been shown without all the controversy. Even if the film were pornographic, the public still had nothing to fear.

PORNOGRAPHY doesn't need to be banned. It fails by its very nature. Its offensive material and lack of literary merit drive away most people. If a film can't attract an audience, it will quickly fade into oblivion.

It's a tragedy that books and films of such little value are permitted to endanger such a valuable ideal as freedom of expression. After all, it would seem that little would be lost if truly pornographic books and films disappeared altogether.

However, pornography is such a hard word to define that when people begin to ban pornography, they invariably end up banning books and films which contain unpopular ideas which deserve to be expressed.

THIS YEAR school boards have banned such books as Slaughterhouse Five, The Fixer and the American Heritage Dictionary from classrooms and school libraries.

Slaughterhouse Five is an anti-war book. It also expressed some ideas which aren't popular with middle class America. In banning that book, ideas are being suppressed which should be aired.

The Fixer is a book about the drug culture. While most people are against the use of hard drugs, banning books about the problem won't solve it. If the problem is to be solved, the first step must be understanding the situation and that only comes from actual experience or reading books like The Fixer.

The American Heritage Dictionary was banned because it defines words which some people consider to be obscene. Such words are always going to be used, but they might be used less if the people who use them stopped to consider what the words mean. The lack of a dictionary definition won't eliminate a word from the English language, but the presence of a definition might make more people use the word properly.

IT IS apparent that the drives to ban pornography have already been used to try to suppress ideas in our society. This is extremely dangerous because a democracy can't function properly unless all ideas are allowed to be expressed to the public.

That's why the wise people in our society fight so hard for the right of a theater to show films such as "Immoral Tales." It's not because the people are immoral deviants. The wise people won't even be in the audience. They have better ways to spend their time and money.

World leaders pledge to halt rising unemployment, inflation

LONDON (AP)—President Carter and the leaders of six other major industrial nations concluded their summit meeting Sunday with a pledge to fight both unemployment and inflation and to find ways to contain the spread of nuclear war technology in the world.

The leaders decided at the end of the two-day conference to commit themselves to achieving "sustained economic growth" both in their countries and throughout the world.

They also promised to begin a study aimed at increasing the peaceful use of nuclear energy while discouraging the conversion of nuclear fuel into weapons.

"Our most urgent task is to create more jobs while continuing to reduce inflation," the leaders said in a joint communique.

"We are determined to respond collectively to the challenges of the future," they said.

The communique also:

— Committed the governments to meet economic growth targets they have set for themselves which "should provide a basis for sustained noninflationary growth, in our countries and worldwide."

— Called for new measures to finance the international payments deficits experienced by some nations and supported "additional resources" for the International Monetary Fund.

— Promised to give a new impetus to the world trade negotiations now underway in Geneva to help create new opportunities for trade and increase job opportunities. "We reject protectionism: it would foster unemployment, increase inflation and undermine the welfare of our peoples," the communique said.

— Promised to conserve energy and to diversify energy production "so that we reduce our dependence on oil." High world oil prices would be the focus of a new economic summit that sources said would be held in Tokyo next fall.

— Promised to increase aid to poor nations of the world since "the world economy can only grow on a sustained and equitable basis if developing countries share in that growth." The communique called for increasing the resources of the World Bank, which has become a major source of financing for development projects in poor countries, and it invited the Communist bloc to join the West in boosting aid.

— Called for new approaches in dealing with unemployment among young people.

Nuclear energy and how to prevent the spread of nuclear weaponry occupied as much of the summit discussions as did talks on the world economy.

"We agree on the need to increase nuclear energy to help meet the world's energy requirements," the communique said. "We commit ourselves to do this while reducing the risk of nuclear proliferation. We are launching an urgent study how best to fulfill these purposes."

Carter told reporters Saturday night the next step would be "to work with many other nations in bringing about a comprehensive international agreement on how to handle this (nuclear proliferation) problem."

FRENCH President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing said, "There must be a new economic equilibrium," and he praised "the climate of solidarity" that prevailed at the summit.

West Germany's Chancellor Helmut Schmidt gave special thanks to Carter for attending the meeting. He reasserted the German stand that nuclear technology for peaceful purposes should be available to all, with safeguards against abuse.

How to control the spread of nuclear technology appeared to be the major disagreement at the summit.

K-State engineering students place in cement canoe race

Civil Engineering students from 10 colleges across the nation met at Tuttle Creek Saturday to compete in what to some may seem impossible—a concrete canoe race.

K-State placed second in the fourth annual race, sponsored by K-State Civil Engineers and coordinated by Jerry Zovne, assistant professor of civil engineering. The University of Missouri won first place and Texas A&M third.

The K-State women's team took first place in their event and K-State won the construction award.

The concrete canoes varied in weight, Zovne said, ranging from 80 to 300 pounds. The first canoe K-

State constructed and entered in the 1977 race in Indianapolis, Ind. weighed 300 pounds.

"Well, they didn't win that one, but they didn't sink either," Zovne recalled.

THE CANOES in the race were class A canoes—canoes made from Portland cement and reinforced with metal.

"The difference between a class A canoe and class B canoe is that a class B canoe has other types of reinforcement, like nylon strand," Zovne said. "A class A is strictly reinforced with metal."

Student participation in the races at K-State is voluntary, Zovne said. Some other schools offer credit for canoe construction.

About 300 civil engineering colleges in the U.S. are involved in constructing and racing cement canoes.

Vote by teachers ends K.C. strike

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Striking Kansas City teachers voted Sunday to end their seven-week old strike, but the school district indicated it would continue to challenge a ruling ordering it not to take reprisals against strikers.

Judge Lewis Clymer of the Jackson County Circuit Court ordered the teachers back to work and told the district not to punish striking teachers unless they were involved in violence causing injury or property damage.

The district claims it has the right to decide on hirings and firings on an individual basis.

The district told students and teachers in school Friday to return Monday to the same schools and ordered teachers who were on strike to go to their old job locations. The district had nearly completed a plan for gradually opening its schools despite the strike.

Student arrested for battery after allegedly shooting two

A 21 year-old K-State student was arrested Saturday and charged with two counts of aggravated battery after he allegedly shot two men at Tuttle Creek Cove.

Anthony Cabrales, sophomore in psychology, is being held in lieu of $5,000 bond at Riley County Jail in connection with the incident which occurred shortly after midnight Saturday.

Treated and released from St. Mary hospital for gunshot wounds are Rick Smith, Route 5; and James Hedman, 1400 Givens, Manhattan.

Police say Cabrales approached the party at Tuttle Creek but didn't appear to know anyone at the party. Cabrales was involved in an argument with some of the people at the party and left.

He returned shortly with a gun and shot Smith in the chest and Hedman in the arm. He also fired several shots at parked cars and hit at least one more car while leaving.

He was arrested shortly after the incident and charged with aggravated battery. Smith and Hedman were released from St. Mary Hospital on Saturday.

Police said substantial damage was done to at least three cars.

Holiwell hearing reset

The preliminary hearing for Jerome Holiwell, freshman in physical education, has been postponed until June 1.

Holiwell, a member of the K-State football squad, is charged with the rape of a woman in the K-State Athletic Residence Hall March 30. His hearing was originally set for last Friday.

Holiwell was arrested and charged April 26. He is free under $2,500 bond.

Student gets taste of politics at food policies conference

By DOUG HALL
Collegian Reporter

A K-State student was pleased to find President Jimmy Carter's administration actually is "the people's government."

Darrel Suderman, graduate in food science, recently returned from the International Food Policy Issues Conference in Washington, D.C. The 200 persons at the U.S. Department of Agriculture-sponsored conference discussed policies on foreign trade negotiations, global food reserves and U.S. aid to needy countries. Attendance was by invitation only.

"I read an article on the conference in the Manhattan Mercury," Suderman said. "And so the idea came to my head that if this is the people's government like President Carter says, I should be able to get an invitation."

"I wrote letters to Carter and Secretary of Agriculture Robert Bergland requesting an invitation. I got my invitation over the phone on Tuesday (April 26) and left for Washington on Wednesday," he said.

SUDERMAN SAID he was the only student invited to attend, as well as "one of the few people from out of the Washington area." Others at the conference represented the agriculture, treasury and state departments, the Central Intelligence Agency, the United Nations, the World Food Council and other special interest and lobby groups.

"It was a think tank type thing," Suderman said. "It takes a lot more time and more thinking and hashing out policies than I thought it did." The decisions of the conference will be used by Carter and Congress in formulating international food policies.

"One of the big issues talked about was how the U.S. is trying to get less developed countries to become more self-sufficient to meet their own food needs," he said. This issue ties in with U.S. grain reserves and grain prices.

"With low wheat prices, like we have now, it's cheaper for foreign countries to import our wheat and not develop their own agriculture," he said.

Suderman said he is more aware of the complexity of issues and policy-making procedures since attending the conference. He was surprised at the way people in Washington wanted to know what people in other parts of the country are thinking.

Keys says measure won't pass

Tax won't help gas crisis

By JETT ANDERSON
Collegian Reporter

The proposed 50 cent-per-gallon gasoline tax in President Carter's energy proposals will probably be killed in Congress according to 2nd District Congresswoman Martha Keys.

Keys spoke to the second annual all Business College Banquet at the Ramada Inn Saturday.

"It's unfortunate that one of the things most talked about, the gas tax, is one of the things that probably won't pass," Keys said. "And I can tell you, in my opinion, it shouldn't pass."

KEYS said that an additional tax would probably do little to slow gasoline consumption.

"We have seen what has happened since 1973, we've had gasoline costs rising much more than five cents per year and our consumption rate isn't down at all."

"What this says to me is that gasoline tax in anything other than a tremendous amount isn't effective as a conservation tool," she said.

"I think we have proven that people are going to drive as much as they want or as much as they need to and five cents more per gallon probably means just less bread and milk on the table."

Keys said more efficient cars are the answer to the gasoline consumption problem.

"We have to have more fuel efficiency," she said. "Look what could happen if we could change the average fuel efficiency of our cars, which is now 14 miles-per-gallon, to anywhere like 24 miles-per-gallon, which is what it is in Sweden."

Keys said that President Carter's proposed tax and rebate system was not fair to all people.

"The gasoline-guzzler tax and rebate system is one that I don't agree with. I don't think we can allow those who are wealthy enough to pay $500 or $700 or $800 tax to go right ahead and drive gas-guzzling cars.

KEYS said that she has introduced legislation in the House of Representatives which would set minimum mileage requirements for all cars built in the country.

"Congressman Jacobs and I have introduced a piece of legislation that says in 1982, you can't make a car in this country that doesn't get a fuel efficiency of 19 miles-per gallon, which would rise two miles-per-gallon per year until 1985."

In an interview after the banquet Keys said if gasoline consumption goals are not met, then gasoline should be rationed.

"We have proven that increased taxes won't achieve conservation by the tremendous increase in the price of gas since 1973," Keys said.

If Congress passed most of President Carter's energy proposals, she said the need for rationing would be very remote.

"If we pass a lot of the measures, such as fuel efficiency in cars, then we ought to be able to meet lower consumption bills, by the second year anyway," Keys said.

"Therefore, I don't think we ought to have to impose rationing, but if we can't, then I think rationing is a much more democratic and acceptable way to deal with conservation."

KEYS said she was hopeful she could gain support for fuel eficiency minimums rather than a tax and rebate system.

"It is not only an administrative nightmare, but if it is a national necessity to conserve fuel, and it certainly is, then everyone should conserve fuel."

"Just because you are wealthy and can afford to pay an extra tax, you shouldn't be able to get by without conserving fuel. It is just like the old idea when you used to be able to buy your way out of the draft—if you could pay a certain amount of money, you wouldn't have to go to war."

"That was unacceptable in a democracy and soon ended. And I think the concept that you can buy a new gas-guzzling car if you can afford to pay a $700 or $800 tax is unacceptable."

Traffic on campus to decline as bikeways get right-of-way

The bikeway system being implemented for fall will affect campus traffic patterns, said Vincent Cool, assistant to the vice president for University development.

Basic changes will be made to accommodate the two-way bike paths. These will involve making 17th Street from College Heights to Claflin Road one way south and Mid-campus Drive from west of Dickens Hall to Claflin Road one way north.

"It's usual to have two-way bicycle traffic on a one-way street," he said. "I think people'll have to look at the new traffic regulations and study the new traffic patterns next fall."

The parking east of Eisenhower Hall will be removed, he said, and Vattier Drive (in front of the Union) will remain closed during the day.

He said the changes will be an inconvenience to people who must travel on campus, and also inconvenience people who use one parking lot. One-way streets will require them to arrive at a different point and leave in the opposite direction to get off campus.

The good, the bad and the small car

Editor's Note: This is the last of a three-part series comparing economy cars.

By RONN SMITH
Collegian Reporter

This part of the road test series is a summary of the good and bad points of the seven cars tested. No attempt is made to pick the "best" of the seven cars—all would appeal differently to different people. The "best" car would depend on the needs and tastes of the individual.

TOYOTA COROLLA— The Toyota Corolla Sedan is designed for economical, basic transportation. At $3257.25, the Corolla is good under normal driving conditions.

There are nearly 1,000 Datsun dealers in the United States available for parts and service. Major parts are slightly more expensive than for domestic cars, while minor maintenance items cost about the same. The B-210 has a one-year-12,000 mile warranty.

CHEVROLET VEGA— The Chevrolet Vega hatchback tested included tinted glass, side moldings, wheel trim rings and an AM radio in its $3717.75 sticker price. Front seats, while fairly comfortable, lack adjustable backs. With the seat down, the Warranty period for the Pinto is 12 months or 12,000 miles.

SUBARU— The front-wheel drive Subaru sedan is "inexpensive, and built to stay that way," according to Subaru advertising. The test car was a base model, which at $3318.00 had no options. Interior finish is good, though plain, with rubber mats replacing carpeting. Front seats are comfortable and the rear seat is fair, with adequate head and leg room for most adults. Brakes provide good control in panic stops. The 1600 cc engine achieved 26.5 mpg on the test loop.

Reliability for the Subaru is good, according to those at Goestch-Irvine Chrysler-Plymouth-Subaru. Parts and service may be obtained from over 700 dealers in the United States. Like most foreign imports, you can expect slightly higher parts prices than for their domestic counterparts. The Subaru has a 12-month unlimited mileage warranty.

HONDA CIVIC— The Honda Civic CVCC is, overall, a well-engineered car.

The Civic's interior is attractive and solidly built, the only weak spot being the mat-like carpeting. Front seat comfort is good. Rear seat comfort is fair, but leg room is lacking, especially with front seats in the aft position.

The 1488cc CVCC engine achieved 33 mpg on the test loop, the best of the seven cars tested, and does not require unleaded fuel. Handling in the front-wheel drive Civic is good, with light, precise steering. The brakes offer good control in panic stops. Ride quality is slightly choppy, and interior noise levels are acceptable, with some road noise at highway speeds.

Reliability has been very good, according to personnel at Allingham Volkswagen, a dealership importing five makes of cars, including Honda and VW. There are approximately 300 Honda dealers in the United States. Parts prices are slightly higher for Honda as compared to domestics. The Civic has a 12-month-12,000 mile warranty.

VOLKSWAGEN RABBIT— The Volkswagen Rabbit also uses a boxy styling approach which maximizes interior space. Although the interior is rather plain, it provides above average comfort for both front and rear seat passengers, as well as a roomy cargo area with the rear seat folded down. Noise levels are relatively low both in town, and on the highway.

At $4458.88, the Rabbit was the most expensive car tested, and the only car fitted with automatic transmission. Aside from a vibration at idle, the transmission worked well, providing smooth, positive shifts. Those interested in performance, however, would probably want to consider a 4-speed.

Even with the automatic, the Rabbit's 1588cc engine achieved 26.9 mpg on the test loop. It does not require unleaded gasoline. Handling and brakes are both good. Ride was surprisingly smooth for a car this small.

Officials at Allingham Volkswagen said, of the five lines of cars they import, the Rabbit's reliability record has been one of the best, with only the Honda having fewer problems.

Parts and service are available through a network of over 1,000 VW dealers in the United States, with most parts priced slightly higher than those of domestic cars. The Rabbit has a 12-month-20,000 mile warranty.

Dealers providing cars for the test were: Flinthills Toyota, Inc., Key Inc. Datsun, Brewer Motors (Chevrolet), Skaggs Ford, Goestch-Irvine Chrysler-Plymouth-Subaru, and Allingham Volkswagen, Inc.

was the least expensive car tested. The interior showed the effects of cost-cutting, with no carpeting and little instrumentation. Interior fit and finish is good, as is ventilation and front seat comfort. Due to lack of leg room, the rear seat is impractical for most adults.

The Corolla's 1200cc engine, the smallest of any car tested, achieved 32.5 mpg on the test loop. Although the car lacks performance, brakes and handling are good. Ride quality is firm and somewhat harsh on rough surfaces.

The Corolla line has proven itself to be reliable, according to officials at Flint Hills Toyota. When parts are needed, there are over 1,000 Toyota dealers in the United States. The largest of nine parts distributors is in Kansas City. Parts prices, on the average, will be slightly higher than for most domestic cars. The Corolla carries a one-year-12,500 mile warranty.

DATSUN B-210— At $3799.00, the Datsun B-210 offers economical transportation with a few extras, such as full carpeting and air conditioning. The interior of the car is attractive and front seat comfort is good.

Powered by a 1397cc engine, the Datsun registered 27.9 mpg on the test loop. Steering is relatively light and brakes are good. The B-210's ride quality is firm. Handling Vega offers a 26.5 cubic foot cargo area.

With gear ratios designed for optimum fuel economy, the Vega's 2300cc engine logged 28.4 mpg on the test loop. Light steering makes the Vega easy to drive and the brakes provide good control in panic stops.

Chevrolet claims that problems with the aluminum engine block on earlier model Vegas have been corrected. To back this claim, a five-year-60,000 mile limited engine warranty is provided. Officials at Brewer Motors said there have been few problems with the Vega in the past two model years. Availability of most parts is good, with Chevrolet dealers in communities across the nation.

FORD PINTO— The Ford Pinto Three-Door Runabout, with a sticker price of $3696.00, had one of the nicest standard interiors of the cars tested. Front seats are comfortable, though the seat backs are non-adjustable. Rear seat comfort is above average for this type car, with good leg room and adequate headroom. Luggage space totals 29 cubic feet with the seat down.

Fuel economy from the Pinto's 2300cc engine was 28.5 mpg on the test loop. Brakes and handling were good.

Parts availability is no problem in most cases, with Ford dealers in communities across the nation.

National music honor society establishes K-State chapter

Pi Kappa Lambda (PKL), national music honor society, has established a K-State chapter, Delta Lambda.

Edward Brookhart, professor of music, said he and five other K-State faculty members already belonging to PKL petitioned the society's national Board of Regents.

"We submitted information about the University and its music department," Brookhart said. "We also sent in the standards of musical and academic achievement at K-State."

Brookhart said the organization recognizes and encourages the highest level of musical and academic achievement. Seniors initiated must rank in the upper fifth of their class and outstanding juniors, graduate students and faculty also are considered for membership, Brookhart said.

BROOKHART, who will serve as the first president of the K-State chapter, said there are six seniors being initiated in the chapter. He added because the chapter is new, about 40 K-State music faculty members and former students have been invited to join.

The chapter will be installed by Thomas Miller, national PKL president and dean of the School of Music at Northwestern University. John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs, will accept the charter in behalf of the University at a special ceremony at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at All Faiths Chapel.

The six seniors to be initiated are Stephen Easterday, Debra Fromme, Marcia Higginson, Paula Hoisington, Marjorie Neibling and Jean Peterson, all in music.

Varsity blasts alumni, 55-0

Mack Green scored four touchdowns Saturday as the K-State varsity smashed the alumni, 55-0.

Green, a 5-8, 170-pound junior college transfer from Hutchinson, carried the ball 29 times in racking up 185 yards in the fourth annual Varsity-Alumni game.

K-State has been lacking a 'big play' type of player, but Green may fill that role.

"I think he's better than what he did today," said K-State coach Ellis Rainsberger. "He's got that quick breakaway speed that we've been missing. He's exciting and I think he's going to add another aspect to our offensive attack."

GREEN'S FIRST touchdown came in the first quarter after safety Clyde Brinson intercepted a Tom Merrifield pass to start the Cats' first scoring drive at the 44.

Green had carries of 16, 22, four and then scored on a two-yard plunge.

Moments later, Brinson intercepted a pass from Dennis Morrison. Seven plays after that,

Sports

Green swept left end from 10 yards out to score.

Green wasn't the only offensive star for the varsity, which racked up 583 yards.

Tailback Tony Brown rushed for 114 yards on 15 carries and Dave Reynolds had 71 on seven carries. Reynolds scored a pair of fourth quarter touchdowns.

CHARLEY GREEN, split end, caught three passes for 97 yards, including a 62-yard scoring bomb from backup quarterback Dan Mannucci.

"Our backs all look a lot quicker," said Rainsberger. "I liked the way Tony Brown ran and Mannucci did a fine job when he was in there. We're hoping he'll jump in and give us backup support at quarterback."

Rainsberger said there were several aspects of the Cats' game he was pleased with, but was also concerned with some areas.

"Offensively, I think we look pretty good and our defensive backs have played great," he said. "But our defensive line isn't that big and their speed is just adequate. Also, we need to work on our kicking game in the areas of punting and kickoffs."

Several awards were presented after the game. Charley Green was honored as the spring's most improved offensive player, while defensive end Keith Nelms was tabbed the most improved defender.

Mack Green was picked as the most outstanding offensive player for the game. Brinson was most outstanding defensive player.

For the second year in a row, Morrison was honored as the alumni's best offensive player. Mike Kuhn, who had 23 tackles, was the top defender for the alumni.

Korbe, Wildcats take three from Jayhawks

K-State's men's baseball team won three of four games from the Kansas Jayhawks over the weekend.

The Cats defeated the Hawks 1-0 and 13-2 Friday and 4-1 on Saturday. Kansas won the second game Saturday, 7-1.

"We got three very good pitching performances," said Phil Wilson, baseball coach. "Winning three of four gives us momentum heading into the Big Eight tournament."

That pitching resulted in three complete games by Dave Tuttle and Neil Hudson on Friday and Lon Ostrum in the first game Saturday. Tuttle threw a two-hitter in the Cats' 1-0 win.

Ostrum ran his record to 6-2 in Saturday's first game. Ostrum scattered seven hits and had six strikeouts.

Craig Cooper supplied K-State's offense in Saturday's first game. Cooper drove in a pair of unearned runs in the second with a single to right. He had another run-scoring single in the fourth.

K-State has now played six games in three days, but Wilson said it was good experience for his pitchers.

"When you get in a tournament, you might use six or seven pitchers," Wilson said. "We needed a chance to give them some work."

K-State's only run in Saturday's loss came on right fielder Greg Korbe's RBI single to left in the first.

That hit and the one he had in the first game gave Korbe 64 hits for the season, breaking the school record of 62 set by Jon Yeagley and Steve Anson last year.

Korbe also belted a home run for Friday's 1-0 victory.

K-State is now 27-21 on the season. The Cats won't see action again until they meet defending champion Missouri in first round conference post-season play, May 18, in Oklahoma City.

Kansas is now 22-21-1.

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies

k-state union

available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next Fall during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Kansas beats Cat thinclads

Powerful Kansas romped past K-State's men's track team, 99-55, Saturday at the Christian Track.

It was no surprise that Kansas, defending Big Eight indoor and outdoor champion, won easily.

But K-State track coach Mike Ross was pleased with his team's performance.

"The kids on the track just did a great job," Ross said. "If they compete like that in the Big Eight Outdoor, we have a good chance to finish in the upper half."

The Cats were at their best in the middle distances.

Senior Bob Prince sparked a 1-2-3 K-State sweep in the 800 meters and a 1-2 showing in the 1,500.

Prince ran the 800 in 1:51.2 and clocked 3:51.6 in the 1,500.

LARRY BEESLEY added another distance victory for the Cats by clicking off a time of 14:43.0 in the 5,000 meters.

Freshman J.D. Hill was a surprise winner over Jayhawk star Anthony Coleman in the 110 high hurdles with a time of 14.3.

K-State won the mile relay in 3:15.1 with the team of Kent Adams, Chris Muehlbach, Darnell Washington and Prince. KU dropped the baton on the third leg of the race.

Ross wasn't happy with the Cats' performance in the field events. K-State's only victory was Frank Perbeck's 219-1 throw in the javelin.

"If we could have come up with some support in the field events we'd have been okay," he said. "I figured we'd win the triple jump and I thought we'd have a good shot at winning the discus."

The Cats won't see action again until the Big 8 Outdoor Championships, May 20-21, in Lawrence.

Cats second to ISU

K-State's women's track team finished in the runner-up spot behind powerful Iowa State Saturday in the women's track meet involving Big Eight schools in Lawrence.

The Cyclones ran away with the meet, scoring 218 points compared to 151 for K-State. Missouri was third with 68, Nebraska fourth with 54, Kansas fifth with 44, Colorado sixth with 17, Oklahoma seventh with nine and Oklahoma State last with four.

K-State had three firsts—one in the field events and two in running events.

Shot putter Christy Tumberger finished first with a record throw of 45-8 1/4. Her toss broke the old mark of 43-11 1/2 by Kansas' Jessie Riddle in 1976.

In the 1,500 meters, Renee Urish defended her title of a year ago taking first in 4:24.6.

The sprint medley team of Jan Osborn, Sharon McKee, Lisa

Wallace and Cindy Worcester raced home to first place with a time of 1:45.8.

K-State took five second places. Leading the way was sprinter Jan Smith who was clocked in 11.9 in the 100 meters and 24.7 in the 200 meters.

Linda Long was second in the shot put with a throw of 43-7, Worcester was second in the 800 meters in 2:12.0 and the Wildcat two-mile relay was second with a 9:16.9.

There may be GOLD in your closet.

For years, objects of great value have been accumulating in the closets, drawers, basements and bookshelves of Manhattan. Ignored, despised, and long unused, these items could be worth tens of thousands, if only their owners were alert enough to bring them to market!

We're talking about books. Virtually every student has lots of 'em. Of course, almost everybody brings some of their books to the Union to sell every semester. But, a good many more never get to us, because they are forgotten or mis-laid.

So, before you make your trip up to the Union to sell your books, go on a treasure hunt. Check all those nooks and crannies, pile up your discoveries, and cash in. Even books which were discontinued last year could be on the list again. You'll never know until you try.

The Union will be paying those unrivaled high prices again starting May 13th (that's this Friday) and continuing through final week.

Med schools attract various majors

By DAN REIFF
Collegian Reporter

K-State students accepted to medical schools this year represent a wide variety of fields of interests.

"My feeling is that the selection committees are not that concerned over majors," Bettie Dale, advisor in the college of Arts and Sciences, said. "They are looking for good grades and students with depth or breadth or both."

THE ACCEPTANCE of students from non-medical or non-science curriculums by medical schools is not new, Dale said.

"My cracker-barrel philosophy is that someone in another major who applies and goes to medical school, is gifted intellectually and can do well in many areas," she said.

Some students switch majors because their majors are similar to medical curriculum requirements, Dale said. "They do have to take the same basic science courses, but those are not their total education," she said. "They also have to take the same medical school entrance tests and are expected to perform at the same level."

DALE, who has been advising pre-med students for five years, said the most unusual field she has seen a student enter medical school from was entomology.

Ann Bidwell, who was accepted into med school, has a degree in music from Southern Methodist University (SMU).

She became interested in the field of medicine while doing graduate work at SMU, she said. "A friend was in podiatry school (treatment of feet) and talking about it and the bells went off," Bidwell said. "It sounded like a challenge and a lot more opportunity than there was in music. She returned to Manhattan, and began taking the necessary science courses at K-State, she said.

"I went from a strict music to a strict medicine curriculum," Bidwell said. "It was a new language for me."

"My main consideration was, here I am going to take two years out of my life with no guarantee that I would be accepted by a medical school," she said.

ELIZABETH KOCK, who also has been accepted into medical school, has a degree in German and history.

Her decision to go into medicine came while she was doing undergraduate work in Europe, she said.

"I had always been interested in science, especially biology," she said. "I loved the sciences as much as I loved humanities. Medicine combines the two." Koch's decision was not a quick one, she said.

"It was a gradual thing," she said. "I let it germinate in my mind and it was there. It was by no means a snap judgement. "My question was, where am I going to be happy, where am I going to be worthwhile."

Both women offered advice to others who may be considering medicine but are not particularly interested in being a science or pre-medicine major.

"A lot of people think you have to be real smart to get to medical school," Bidwell said. "All it takes is work, persistence and horse sense."

"Half the battle is won, when you convince yourself you can win," Koch said.

Neither Koch nor Bidwell can see any value in a strictly pre-medicine curriculum.

"I don't really see a purpose for a pre-medicine degree," Koch said. "What can you do with it if you don't get into medical school."

Demonstrators battle police to protest new Tokyo airport

TOKYO (AP)—Riot police battled on Sunday with firebomb-throwing demonstrators trying to block the opening of Tokyo's new international airport. About 300 protesters and 110 policemen were injured, police said.

No deaths were reported, although one person was in critical condition after being hit in the head by a police tear gas projectile, officers said. Police arrested 33 demonstrators.

The violence erupted after some 3,700 students and farmers confronted 4,000 riot police near the new Narita airport, 40 miles east of Tokyo.

The demonstrators blocked roads to the airport, set fire to two automobiles and pushed the burning cars toward police lines. One of the cars smashed into a house garage, damaging it.

Police, backed by armored cars, fired more than 300 tear gas shells and took several hours to disperse the crowd.

The new airport, which is intended to relieve congestion at the Tokyo airport at Haneda, has drawn protest from farmers and students.

SNFU

Good evening, my fellow (unintelligible) Americans. As you know, several news organizations and political (expletive deleted) buttocks have made serious charges recently that the former President and all his men have been involved in hanky panky, executive wrongdoing and general screwing around with the (unintelligible) public good. In order to preserve order, so to speak, and come clean so we can get back to important matters—war and tax breaks for the wealthy—I wish to make the following admissions:

- Yes, I did approve the Watergate burglary. So what?
 - Yes, I and all my men covered up afterwards. So who said the U.S. Constitution was some kind of Bible, anyway?
 - Leon Jaworski and the staff of the Washington Post are Jewboys.
 - I carried on a scandalous relationship with H.R. Haldeman during the 18½ minute tape gap.
 - Yes, I wrote the Collegian SNFU column this semester.
- There, you bastards, you have your confession.

RICHARD M. NIXON

Dear SNFU editor,
Richard Nixon was a sad, sad figure last week as David Frost verbally beat him over the head with the Watergate scandal. Why do you suppose he allowed himself to be humiliated like that?

J.D.

The chance to lie once again, the possibility of knocking "Charlie's Angels" out as the hottest TV show on the market, $600,000 in easy money and the fact that the 1980 presidential elections are only three years away all led me to accept David Frost's offer. You've got to remember—I am a professional politician. I know there are enough stupid jerks in this country to vote for me again if I give them a quick lie and a promise.

If you don't believe that, you have more faith in the American people's common sense than I do. I got elected twice before, you know.

Dear SNFU editor,
The energy shortage, the water shortage, the toilet paper shortage, the coffee shortage—what do you think will be the next big shortage we will face?

J.C.

Since the "pot plane" was busted last month in Jetmore, Kan., K-Staters will soon face a shortage of hallucinations, "seeing God," midnight munchies, natural highs and, in SNFU's case, something to live for.

Tribute, education highlight Dole talks

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., paid tribute to the late Wint Smith and said higher education is threatened by the federal government and contended the hospital cost containment program is shortsighted in a series of Kansas appearances Sunday.

Dole's tribute to Smith, former Congressman from northwest Kansas, came at Mankato when the National Guard armory there was dedicated in Smith's memory.

At Lawrence, Dole said the future of academic freedom has been threatened to a certain extent by the very force which has increased its economic investment in higher education five-fold in the last decade: the federal government.

Committee picks complex site

By JANE HIGGINS
Collegian Reporter

More than a year after an overwhelmingly successful student referendum, K-State's student recreation complex found a home Monday.

A L.P. Washburn complex construction site for the complex will be recommended to K-State President Duane Acker following a 12-2 vote of the K-State Long Range Planning Committee. A roll-call vote for approval of the Washburn site was taken.

Carl Ossmann, of Ossmann and Associates, project architects, recommended the Washburn site.

"The L.P. Washburn site is the cheapest and most practical of the sites based from a utility standpoint," Ossmann said.

IF ACKER approves the Washburn site, he will have to clear the new site with the Kansas Board of Regents, which originally approved a site in the area of Memorial Stadium, said Paul Young, vice president for University development.

Student Body President Terry Matlack supported the Washburn site north of campus. He said students could use that site as easily as the four previously-considered sites near Memorial Stadium.

The main concern for the Washburn site is well-lighted walkways, Matlack said.

At the Washburn site, the complex will be combined with the outdoor tennis and handball facilities.

Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, also favored the Washburn site. He said it would be easier working with two areas—Ahearn Field House and the Washburn complex—if the recreation complex was built at the north site.

IF THE recreation complex were built on one of the Memorial Stadium sites, Robel's offices would be controlling three areas—the stadium, the fieldhouse and the existing Washburn complex facilities, he said.

Rising utility costs, which would be absorbed by students through fees, was the concern of some committee members.

A building at the Washburn site could include a partial basement which would cut utility costs, Ossmann said.

Solar energy and other energy-conserving systems for the complex were discussed by the committee.

Mysterious killings of women leave police, neighbors baffled

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP)—Terror in a Washington suburb: Three young women dead, each murdered in a different way. A fourth missing. And police have no idea who did the killings—or why.

The murders began with the strangulation last August of Aura Marina Gabor, 24, a masseuse whose body was found in nearby woods. Then, 10 days ago, Gladys Bradley, 27, a postal employee, was discovered drowned, face down, in a stream.

Finally, alarm escalated to terror last Thursday when Jeanette McClelland, 24, a proofreader and aspiring editor, was found stabbed to death in a culvert.

On that same day, Aletha Byrd's empty car turned up near a shopping center about a mile away, the same location where the cars of the other three women were left. Byrd, 34, has been missing for a month.

POLICE CAPT. Clyde Scott says there is no known connection among the women, other than the fact that they resided within three blocks of each other and "often came home alone late at night."

Though the three deaths each involved a separate method of murder, police say that the pattern—particularly the abandoned cars—tends to point to a single person, or group of persons, who stalked the complex of garden apartments at random, waiting for a woman to drive up alone during the night.

Apparently the women were seized near their cars, since police have no evidence that any of their apartments were forcibly entered.

The disappearance of Byrd, an employee in the personnel department of a department store, is still officially listed as "suspicious," but it's clear that the scores of officers now combing the surrounding woods are looking for a body.

ACCORDING TO Scott, police have hundreds of names to check out and have no suspects, no sure leads. A search is being made of records from prisons and mental institutions for "anything having to do with assaults on women," he said.

But that is little comfort to many of the area's residents.

"I've never been this scared in my life," said one young woman. "I used to ride my bike at night...do my laundry at night...come home late by myself. But no more."

A-credit-no credit meets with favor from some faculty

By BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

Initial reaction from Faculty Senate officials to an A-credit-no credit resolution, approved by Student Senate last Thursday, is positive.

An A-credit-no credit system would enable students using the credit-no credit option to receive an A grade for A work in that class.

The resolution has not yet been considered by the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs committee, which must approve it before it can be approved by Faculty Senate.

"I think the theory has some merit," said Carole Franq, Academic Affairs committee chairman. "Of course I'd like to see a copy of the proposal before I comment on the details, but I think it's worth consideration."

"I think if I were a student I might be more likely to take more classes this way—if I deserved an A I'd get it," Franq said, adding she hasn't heard much faculty reaction to the proposed system.

If the proposal gets the committee's approval, it will be forwarded to the Faculty Senate Executive Committee and then to senate, said Teresa Perenich, outgoing senate president.

PERENICH SAID senate will take no action on the proposed system at today's meeting and probably will wait until June 6 to consider it.

Frank Orazem, senate president-elect, said he believes the A-credit-no credit system would give students an incentive to put more effort into credit-no credit classes.

"Some students are more mindful of their grades than other students," he said. "A student, for example, may be getting an A in a credit-no credit class and may ease off in that class because he knows, regardless if he got a C or a D, he would get the same grade in that class."

Orazem said the proposed program would probably not add to grade inflation.

"In some classes, students don't have the option of taking classes credit-no credit," he said. "Also the number of hours a student can take credit-no credit is limited."

"It would make students study better and thus learn more in some classes," Orazem said.

Legislators pass drug execution bill

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—A bill to allow Oklahoma to execute its condemned criminals by a lethal drug injection was given final approval by the state House of Representatives Monday and sent to Gov. David Boren.

The Oklahoma legislature is the second in the nation to pass such a measure. Texas lawmakers approved a similar bill last week, but it has yet to be signed into law.

Gov. Boren has indicated he will sign the Oklahoma bill.

The House voted 68-22 in favor of adopting a conference compromise bill, then gave the bill final approval by a 75-15 margin.

Rep. John Monks, D-Muskogee, argued against adopting the conference version, which deleted his amendment that would require that electrocutions continue until the U.S. Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of the lethal drug injections.

California weathers rainstorm

By The Associated Press
It would have been just fine for February—snow in the Northeast and a downpour in California. But it all took place in the merry month of May.

Rainfall in Los Angeles on Sunday added up to 15 times the average amount for the entire month. And Monday public works crews in the Northeast pulled out the snowplows, already stored away for the summer, to clear away up to six inches of snow.

THE FREAKY weather closed schools and ripped down power lines in Massachusetts, New York and Connecticut. In the West, it sprinkled snow on some mountainous areas, sent drought-stricken northern Californians running for buckets to save the precious water and rained out the Los Angeles Dodgers' baseball game—only the fifth time that's happened since the team moved to California in 1958.

It hardly ever rains in sunny southern California from May through September, and the Mother's Day storm made it the wettest May in the area in 56 years. Average rainfall for May is .13 inches, but the deluge brought this month's total to 2.02 inches.

The National Weather Service said 1.96 inches of rain fell in Los Angeles by Sunday evening. That surpassed the record for May 8 of one inch set in 1955. It also beat the previous record for rainfall in one May day, 1.76 inches set on May 3, 1892.

The storm increased the total for the water year—July 1, 1976, to date—to 11.27 inches, compared to the normal 13.97 inches. Last year's rainfall total to May 8 was 7 inches.

THE DROUGHT-PARCHED northern and central California areas got little more than sprinkles. San Francisco had .16 of an inch of rain, bringing the season total to 9.71 inches, compared to the 20.16 inches that is normal for this time of year.

The sudden reappearance of winter sent temperatures in New York City to 36 degrees, only one degree short of the record cold of 1947. The city had some snow, but the worst of the storm settled on areas in upstate New York and western Massachusetts.

Murderers of rich widow may have taken $3 million

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—The killers of Marjorie Jackson overlooked more than $5 million in cash hidden at her home, but they may not have left empty-handed—up to $3 million may be missing.

Detectives said Monday that the reclusive, 66-year-old grocery chain heiress, described by neighbors as eccentric, deeply religious and distrustful, apparently had withdrawn more than $8 million from several banks.

"She had different businesses she was involved in, and she had money in all these different banks," said Marion County Sheriff's Lt. Robert Kirkman.

Kirkman said he had heard, but had been unable to confirm, that the only will Mrs. Jackson left was written in the late 1960s, before the death of her husband, Chester.

"The will said that if he died first, she got everything, and if she died first, he got everything," Kirkman said.

HE SAID the list of suspects was growing, but at least four appeared solid. They include a man who told police Sunday that he and two companions stole $817,000 from Jackson in January.

The woman refused to press charges against the three, telling police the robbery "was the will of God," Kirkman said.

More than $5 million in cash was found in a garbage can, toolboxes, closets and a vacuum cleaner bag in the woman's cluttered home Saturday. The money was being held at an Indianapolis bank for safekeeping, Kirkman said. Authorities said they also discovered thousands of small packages tagged as "gifts to God."

"She bought two Cadillacs so that she'd have one available if the other broke down," said Betty Miller, a neighbor who may have been the only person the woman trusted.

"She began talking to my husband when he was seeding the lawn and building our house," said Miller. "Then whenever she had a problem she would call us."

Several neighbors had disputes with her over the condition of her property in the affluent neighborhood. Her house is surrounded with weeds, in stark contrast to neighboring, well-manicured lawns.

"She had said God told her not to mow the yard for seven years," Miller said. "This is the year that she could have cut it."

Jackson's pajama-clad body was found by firemen fighting a blaze at her home. Police believe she died Friday of a gunshot wound in the abdomen and the killers might have returned and set the fire.

Extra speed costs Martha

A Riley County Police officer made a big catch with his radar trap Sunday.

Officer Sam Thompson reported that 2nd District Congresswoman Martha Keys was doing 37 mph in a 30 mph zone.

Keys said through her Topeka office Monday that she was driving back to Kansas City for a flight to Washington when stopped, and that she would mail her fine and admission of guilt to city court.

Distribution delay for Royal Purple

Distribution of the 1977 Royal Purple has been delayed one week.

The books, usually distributed during dead week, will be distributed Wednesday, May 18, Thursday, May 19 and Friday, May 20.

The late delivery is the result of missing the last deadline, said Bill Brown, director of Student Publications. He explained that previously the yearbook printers would accept a computer printout for the index copy but refused to do so this year.

The company, Inter-Collegiate Press of Shawnee Mission, refused to set the type from the index, which caused a delay while yearbook staffers prepared the index, Brown said.

Delivery will be the same as previous years. Students should bring their second-semester fee cards to the middle entrance on the east side of Kedzie Hall or the west entrance in the newer portion of Kedzie.

After checking names against a master list, distribution workers will give students a card entitling them to pick up their book from a trailer parked on the west side of old Kedzie.

Students leaving campus before May 18 are urged to make arrangements with a friend to have the book picked up, Brown said. They may give their second semester fee card to the person who is to pick up the book.

LOS ANGELES—Patricia Hearst, who admitted her part in a wild shooting and robbery, was placed on five years probation Monday by a judge who expressed compassion for her parents.

Hearst, 23, is currently free on bail from a seven-year sentence for a San Francisco bank robbery and could return to serve at least 14 more months if her appeal is rejected.

Hearst, who faced the possibility of 15½ years to life in prison on her plea of no contest, was silent and blank-faced as Superior Court Judge Talbot Callister announced his decision for leniency.

In an unexpected move, the prosecution joined with the defense in recommending immediate probation for Miss Hearst.

Deputy Dist. Atty. Sam Mayerson said "I do not believe Miss Hearst presents any threat to the community any longer."

CAIRO, Egypt—Egyptian and Israeli troops have been firing live ammunition every night for more than a month in separate military exercises behind United Nations cease-fire lines in the Sinai Peninsula, diplomatic sources said Monday.

Diplomats here said there has been no violation of the 1975 disengagement agreement under which U.S. field observers monitor a buffer zone between Israeli and Egyptian troops in Sinai.

"Neither side has fired across the demilitarized zone," one diplomatic source said.

Sources said United Nations officials and U.S. monitors are concerned about the proximity of Egyptians and Israeli military maneuvers, sometimes as close as 30 miles from each other.

KANSAS CITY—Former president Gerald Ford will be judged favorably by history because he was able to restore the confidence of the American people, said officials who gathered Monday to honor him.

Ford received the Harry S. Truman Good Neighbor award in ceremonies here Monday. Speakers lauded him for his work, as president, in restoring the country's economy and for encouraging a positive image of the nation, both here and abroad.

Alf Landon, the 89-year-old unsuccessful 1936 Republican candidate, said Ford would be ranked by historians as a good president, if not a great one.

LAWRENCE—Susan Ford is planning to withdraw from the University of Kansas William Allen White School of Journalism, according to Dean Del Brinkman.

Ford told Brinkman April 28 that she was leaving the university because she had missed several classes and thought it was too much work to make up. The dean said she gave no reason for missing the classes.

Ford, daughter of former President Gerald Ford, enrolled at the university last January to seek a major in photojournalism and also planned to work part time at the Topeka Capital-Journal.

Rich Clarkson, chief photographer of the Capital-Journal, said Ford was still on the newspaper's payroll but had not worked regularly because of "school and other commitments." Ford was not available for comment Monday night.

ATLANTA—An alarming increase in the incidence of measles nationwide may make it necessary for school officials to keep children at home unless they get immunized, the national Center for Disease Control said Monday.

Hinman pointed to recent immunization drives against measles in Detroit, Los Angeles and Alaska, where pupils who had not had shots were banned from schools. He said that approach may be necessary elsewhere.

Bennett signs landmark bill setting $1.60 minimum wage

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill establishing a state minimum wage, a landmark piece of labor legislation in Kansas, has been signed by Gov. Robert Bennett.

The governor also announced Monday he had signed into law a bill authorizing the Kansas Board of Regents to purchase admission slots at colleges of osteopathic medicine and to make loans to osteopathic students. The measure is aimed at bringing more doctors to Kansas' rural areas.

THE MINIMUM wage bill sets $1.60 per hour as the minimum and mandates payment of time and one-half for all work over 46 hours per week. It covers workers not already covered by federal minimum wage legislation or those under union contract.

Exempt from the law are agricultural workers, those over 60 and under 18, domestics, professional management level workers and a few others. The state Department of Human Resources estimates that between 100,000 and 150,000 persons will be affected by the law.

In announcing the signing of the bill, Bennett said he was pleased with the opportunity of making the measure law but was disappointed that the legislature "did not have the foresight to provide the funds to carry out a minimum wage program in the Department of Human Resources."

"Hopefully, the funds can be provided next year. In the meantime, we intend to begin work with the resources and personnel presently available to start the program as mandated next Jan. 1.

"The legislature then will have ample opportunity based on our actual experience of administering the program, to provide the needed funding," he said.

UNDER TERMS of the legislation, the Department of Human Resources will act only if a written complaint is received.

The governor called the osteopathic medicine bill a step toward solving the problem of providing health care in underserved areas of Kansas.

"There are strong indications that doctors graduated from colleges of osteopathic medicine are willing to locate in rural areas," he said.

"Thus, this legislation can be viewed as investment in our state's future by providing a vehicle to increase the number of physicians in underserved areas of Kansas."

Carter plan to alter Social Security taxes

WASHINGTON (AP)—In an effort to keep the Social Security system from going broke, President Carter proposed Monday to make employers and middle and upper income workers pay more taxes.

The proposal also would use general tax funds to bolster Social Security reserves for the first time.

The plan sent to Congress by the White House would fundamentally alter the traditionally independent system of financing Social Security entirely through special payroll deductions marked "FICA" on nearly every payroll stub.

IF THE administration's plan or some other is not adopted, the Social Security trust funds that pay benefit checks to 33 million retired or disabled Americans will run out of money in the early 1980s.

The administration proposes to funnel general tax revenues into the Social Security system in periods of high unemployment like the current one.

Complex site choice betrays students

The needs of K-State students have been ignored once again.

In February 1976, K-State students overwhelmingly endorsed a referendum to increase their fees to build a recreation complex. Proponents of the complex vowed Memorial Stadium would receive first priority as the site for the complex.

ON MONDAY, the University Long-Range Planning Committee voted 12-2 that the proposed complex should be located near the L.P. Washburn complex by the KSU Stadium.

Many students voted "yes" on the referendum believing the complex would be centrally located.

A Memorial Stadium site would have allowed students to use the recreation complex between classes and at noon.

A MEMORIAL Stadium location would have placed the proposed complex within comfortable walking distance for most off-campus students.

Although the Memorial Stadium location would have entailed a higher cost per square foot of the building, the increased use made possible by a central location would have outweighed the increased cost.

As approved by the planning committee, the complex will be located outside of comfortable walking distance for almost all off-campus students.

IT WILL also be unfeasible for students to use the complex between classes and at noon unless they have more than an hour break.

In choosing the L.P. Washburn complex location, the planning committee thoughtfully provided students with the most building per dollar.

Unfortunately, this wonderful building will be placed where it will be difficult for most students to use.

Rose gardens favorite spot

This is my last column, written during my next-to-last week at K-State.

Yesterday morning, I took a leisurely stroll around campus to refamiliarize myself with five years of my life. In the rose gardens, between Dickens and Justin Halls, one of my favorite spots, I realized this campus will never be the same.

In 20 years, if I should return here, I won't be able to say, "There are the rose gardens, my favorite spot during my undergraduate days."

ALTHOUGH it hasn't happened yet, I still feel a sense of loss and betrayal as I think of the impending move of the gardens to a spot near the dairy barns. I feel cut-off from my past. I feel betrayed by the men responsible for this campus.

Somewhere in Anderson Hall, there is a group of small-minded men of little vision, painfully aware of their own mortality and threatening the things which have and will out-live them.

In an attempt to secure their own destinies, they wittingly or unwittingly destroy the landmarks by which many other people anchor their destinies.

Do the planners of this University's future have no feelings for the aesthetic value of a thing or place?

From my limited view, it seems the conservatory and surrounding garden, in place since the early 1900s is being swept away with all the regard one gives a chess piece in way of a check-mate.

AND, THIS beautiful spot is being relegated to a spot near the dairy barns. A rose garden beside a foul-smelling cow lot is so incompatible, that the logic of choosing such a location completely escapes me.

Also, this remote area is totally removed from the normal paths of student traffic. No longer will one be able to linger along the paths of color which provide a brief respite from the cares of the days.

It's too late to change the plans that have been made. I will not accuse anyone of slipping something past the students and alumni of K-State. However, I feel someone slipped something past me, personally. I never knew the fate of my rose garden was being threatened until it was too late.

I never knew the rich architecture of Dickens Hall was about to be obscured by a new neighbor.

But, I should have known. Look at our campus. New buildings are being built while old and architecturally more interesting buildings are allowed to decay beyond usefulness.

THE PATHETIC ruins of Nichols Gym will continue to sink into the refuse pile growing at its base. Its hollow, empty windows, looking like the sockets of a human skull, continue to call out for renewal. But it is not forthcoming.

Just as the tennis courts have disappeared under the asphalt of the Union parking lot, so will the old stadium disappear under the structure of a recreation complex.

In 20 or 50 years, when I return to visit my alma mater, the spots which I hold so dear will no longer be in existence.

Thanks for the memories.

'Senior citizen' label criticized

Editor

On approaching age 65 I have found out several interesting things. The most important one is that I am the same individual that I have always been, whether 55, 35 or 15. I have been given a new label however, "senior citizen."

ALL OF a sudden I begin seeing numerous stories about how I am going to "be" or "do" or "not be able to do" this or that thing.

I believe since I have always been able to fill my hours with work, play, reading or something I enjoy, that I will not now have a problem doing that.

There are some people who have never learned to live to the fullest each day and I am sure they still will not be able to.

These people will perhaps need someone to fill their hours for them, but they always had this need—not because of their age.

CERTAINLY, a lot of them do not have ample means, but that state certainly is not limited to older people.

Probably "senior citizen" and "teen-ager" are the most misunderstood people around, as both are capable of a lot more than they are given credit for.

I personally do not want a label. I just want to be "me," as I have always been, whether 15 or 65.

Instructor praised

Editor,

So rarely, we students find ourselves—quite by accident, of course—sitting in a classroom where the instructor is so stimulating that one does not notice the temperature, one does not yield to the dreariness of the walls and one does not succumb to sleepiness.

OUR SENSES, in fact, become more acute; our intellectual awareness excited and our desire to learn uncontrollable. It is then that we understand and what a "love for learning" is all about.

One such teacher—John Delehanty in economics—died last month. I once had the opportunity to allow him the compliment that only a student can honestly avail: I learned from him.

I am thankful for those K-Staters lucky enough to study under such a teacher who could make a subject shine...and excite a student about learning.

Hall policy creates problem in Ford

A policy posted April 25 in Ford Hall which stated girls not living in that hall will not be hired as fall receptionists has been called a "mistaken policy" by Thomas Frith, director of Housing.

"I think this was an honest error," Frith said, "I think she (Mary Ann Becnel, Ford Hall director) misunderstood the existing Housing policy." The current Housing policy states qualified people living in the halls will be hired before those outside the halls, Frith said.

Frith has told Becnel and her husband, Harry, also a director of Ford, to review the applications again. He said this does not necessarily mean the girls moving out of the hall will be hired.

"I don't think where I live has any bearing on the type of job I could do," said Bekki Dunn, a receptionist this year who is moving out of Ford.

DUNN said she assumed she would have a job next year because of a meeting a month before the policy was posted in which the current receptionists were asked if they would be returning to work.

"I responded that I wanted to be a receptionist again next year," Dunn said. "At that time Mary Ann (Becnel) knew that I was not going to be living in the dorm."

"I thought I had a job until I saw the notice," she said.

Harry Becnel said the girls were never told they had a job.

"We want girls that are qualified for the job and we feel if they don't live in the dorm they won't be as familiar with the events within the hall," he said.

"The girls are bitter because they didn't get a job," he said. "They didn't get a job because they aren't as qualified as those living in the dorm. Our hiring policy is across the board like the other dorms."

Dunn said the girls who won't be living in the hall believe they are employed by the state, not the hall, and therefore should be able to live where they desire.

Tale of merchant's life fiasco in foreign film

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Merchant of Four Seasons," will be shown in Forum Hall at 3:30 and 7 p.m. today. Admission price is $1.

By KATHY HUFFMAN
Collegian Reporter

With finals coming and time precious, there are better things to do than see a bad movie.

The German version of "The Merchant of Four Seasons" is poor. The acting is atrocious and the plot confusing.

Hans Epp is a man who's had a

Collegian Review

hard life because, according to his sister Anna, he hasn't been treated right by anyone. He belonged to the foreign legion, was fired from the police force, beats his wife and is now a fruit peddler.

AFTER A HEART attack, he is forced to quit peddling and hire someone to do it for him. His wife, Irmgard, helps him adjust but the idle life doesn't appeal to him.

The film is filled with flashbacks which are not handled well and are confusing. At first, the film appears to be a reminiscence but then bleeds into reality and back out without warning. Past love affairs of both Irmgard and Hans are thrown in at random adding to the general confusion.

The affairs are handled fairly well without explicit sex but there is some nudity.

The actor's characterizations are cold and lifeless. Epp's character could be complex, depicting depression, rage, and desperation but as it is presented it is simply mechanical.

ALL THE acting is exaggerated and almost melodramatic making the people humorous caricatures instead of real people with real problems.

Another detriment to the film is the subtitles. They are fairly easy to read but the impact of the lines is lost in translation from spoken lines to faint white letters running across the bottom of the screen.

The most interesting aspect of the film is its inside view of a small German town and its inhabitants. It shows street scenes as well as home shots which depict the German way of life. This insight, however, isn't strong enough to save the film.

With better acting and a better script, this movie could possibly be good enough for the late, late show.

K-State instructors receive outstanding teacher awards

Four teachers have been awarded the K-State "Outstanding Teacher Award" for 1977.

"The award is given for outstanding undergraduate teaching," said Richard Owens, director of the Office of Educational Improvement.

The recipients are Thomas Parish, associate professor of administration and foundations; Randolph Pohlman, assistant professor of business administration; Robert Shoop, assistant professor of administration and foundations; and Faye Ann Price, instructor in family and child development.

The teachers were nominated by their students and each college narrowed the list to two nominees, except the College of Arts and Sciences, which chose six.

The final decisions were made by an all-University committee composed of five students and four faculty members.

The committee members made their decision from a folder of each teacher which contained the original student ballots, three colleague rating forms and a department head rating.

The department head rating included such items as helpfulness to students by being available and openness to new teaching methods, said Owens, a non-voting member of the special committee.

Pohlman, Parish, and Shoop are first-year teachers at K-State. All said they were pleased to have received the award because it is based on ratings by the faculty and students.

Price, who has been at K-State four years, also said the award is important to her because of the rating by her peers and the student recommendations. She received an award of $500, the second category nominee which includes instructors and graduate teaching assistant.

The recipients will be given the awards at Commencement, Friday, May 20.

Sandstrom unable to meet court bail

TOPEKA (AP)—Milda Sandstrom, wife of slain Topeka a broadcast executive Thad Sandstrom, was unable to come up with a $75,000 surety bond and remained in Shawnee County jail.

A hearing was scheduled Tuesday morning before Shawnee District Court Judge Kay McFarland during which Mrs. Sandstrom's attorney will request a reduction in the bond.

She is charged with first degree murder in the fatal shooting of Sandstrom last Tuesday. A preliminary hearing in the case is tentatively scheduled for May 20.

An effort Monday by friends to post bond failed because the judge ruled it insufficient.

There may be GOLD in your closet.

For years, objects of great value have been accumulating in the closets, drawers, basements and bookshelves of Manhattan. Ignored, despised, and long unused, these items could be worth tens of thousands, if only their owners were alert enough to bring them to market!

We're talking about books. Virtually every student has lots of 'em. Of course, almost everybody brings some of their books to the Union to sell every semester. But, a good many more never get to us, because they are forgotten or mis-laid.

So, before you make your trip up to the Union to sell your books, go on a treasure hunt. Check all those nooks and crannies, pile up your discoveries, and cash in. Even books which were discontinued last year could be on the list again. You'll never know until you try.

The Union will be paying those unrivaled high prices again starting May 13th (that's this Friday) and continuing through final week.

Three encores take Daniels back home

By ROBERT C. MILLER
Collegian Reviewer

GARDEN CITY—Red-eyed and pale, he mopped his damp forehead with a red bandana and sighed.

"We're going home tonight," he said, to no one in particular.

Charlie Daniels, portly king of Southern country-rock, had just delivered a strong hour and forty-five minute concert in an expansive metal building on the Finney County Fairgrounds. Relaxing now, inside a backstage mobile home, with a long, dark cigar and a can of Dr. Pepper, Daniels talked about his music and life on the road.

Collegian Review

"I love it. I never get tired of touring. The crowds are great wherever we go," he stated, letting the ashes from his cigar fall to the floor.

JUST TWO hours before, with the sound system playing, "The Tennessee Waltz," Daniels and his band strode on stage as a crowd of about 2000 people came to their feet, cheering.

"Whenever I get off the bus, I'm ready to play. But, it'll be good getting home. Being away from my family is the hardest part of being on tour," he said, his pleasant, round face displaying some sadness.

On stage, Daniels' presence is unlike most rock-and-rollers. He's polite, serious and unpretentious. With his bearded face hidden under a large white cowboy hat blocked bull-rider style, he devotes himself to his guitar.

Almost shy, he greets each ovation with a simple "God bless you" and begins again.

Supported by an excellent sound system, the Charlie Daniels Band sounded sharp, clean and tight. Daniels' voice on lead vocals was clear and strong.

Backed up by two drummers, bass and rhythm guitars and a white grand piano, Daniels performed some lengthy, intricate guitar solos the powerful chords of which washed over the audience in waves of sound. But, he didn't dominate the whole show.

"The Charlie Daniels Band is a team. They're not just a back-up band. We all play together," he said.

During the show, Daniels would step back and allow each member to solo for the audience. Joel "Taz" Digregorio, on grand piano, was excellent as were the other members of the band.

HOWEVER, it was not until near the end of the concert that Daniels brought the crowd to its feet. After playing two songs planned for his new album, Daniels ducked off-stage and returned with a fiddle. The high-spirited, rapid-fire music he coaxed from this instrument was exciting.

On "Cumberland Mountain No. 9," his searing high notes were almost painful. During "Texas," while his fiddling was drawing wild cheers from the audience, Daniels began picking, matching notes with the piano. "Texas," a fast-paced ode to the Lone Star State, was well-chosen for their finale. The audience called the band back for three encores. Only after playing three songs from their "Fire on the Mountain" album, did Daniels and the band retire.

Backstage, while they ate a late supper and the crowd filed out, the stage crew began tearing down the set and loading it for the trip back to Nashville.

"We're a team. Even the stage crew. We're going home now to rehearse, then go into the studio in a month or so to record. I just wish I had a title for it," Daniels said.

Then, with a tired sigh, he was led out of the mobile home by his manager. Under the harsh lights of the now-empty building, Daniels walked towards an exit and awaiting station wagon.

"It was a good show," he said.

Lafene to check blood pressures

One out of six adults in the United States today has high blood pressure making it one of the leading causes of disease and death, according to Mike Bradshaw, an instructor at Lafene Student Health Center.

Only one-half of the people suffering from high blood pressure know it, because there are no characteristic symptoms, Bradshaw said. It will continue until it's checked by a doctor.

A blood pressure screening is scheduled in conjunction with National Blood Pressure Month from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Wednesday and from 1:30 to 4 p.m. Thursday at Lafene Student Health Center.

Tables will be set up for students, faculty and staff, Bradshaw said.

The clinic has been conducted for the last three years. Last year, out of the 698 people screened, 120 persons had abnormal blood pressure, Bradshaw said.

High blood pressure can be controlled by drugs, diet, losing weight, exercise and relaxation, he said.

LADY RUGGERS

win tourney

The skinned knees and bruised shins will finally start to heal as the women's rugby season comes to an end. The last tournament was played last weekend at the football practice fields.

The kinship that teamwork creates now shows its evil side as the team says goodbye to four of its starting seniors.

The team finished in its customary glory to leave everyone with good memories. They won the Fourth Annual Sunflower tournament allowing no one to score against them. They defeated St. Louis 12-0, Nebraska 18-0 and Emporia 32-0.

Kim Sanders, team president, said, "the scrum played the best game they've ever played in the final game against Emporia. The scrum was responsible for three or four tries which is unusual because most points are made by the backs."

The cheers of victory are overshadowed as the tears of departure are felt, but Sanders said she believes the team is in good hands.

"It's the strongest rookies we've ever had to turn the team over to," she said. "I'm real confident to leave the team as it is because the rookies are so fine."

They were one of the best teams in the area. They worked, partied and fought together, but they made something click.

Looking back on a 13-0 season, Sanders said, "it was the best team we've ever had."

Williams reflects on first year

By CHERYL CHARLES
Asst. Sports Editor

SALINA—Last year at about this time, Wildcat basketball guard Chuckie Williams was looking forward to his first year in the professional ranks with the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Now Williams has returned to Kansas to relax and reflect on his rookie year.

Williams, who was in Salina visiting his fiancée, said his most difficult adjustment to the pros was the tempo of the game, for which he lacked the stamina.

WILLIAMS . . . looks back on rookie year in NBA.

"They run a lot more in the pros," Williams said. "They have a push man." He explained that a push man takes the ball up the court as fast as possible.

"It's similar to 'run and gun,' but it's more controlled," Williams said.

TRAVELING WAS another part of the pros he had trouble getting used to, he said.

"We played maybe six or seven games at home in a row," he said. Williams said many others were continuous road games. The Cavaliers played 60 games, Williams missing 24 because of an ankle injury.

"I was going up for a rebound and came down on the side of my foot," Williams said. "This happened prior to the start of the NBA regular season."

Williams didn't have a lot of playing time in the games he did participate in, but said it isn't unusual for some teams not to play their rookies frequently.

California, Rudi beat Royals, 5-3

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Terry Humphrey hit his first home run of the year and fourth of his five-year major career while Dave Chalk and Joe Rudi collected three hits apiece, leading the California Angels to a 5-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals Monday night.

The Angels were leading 2-1 with two unearned runs thanks to an error by Kansas City second baseman Frank White when Humphrey nailed Jim Colborn with his two-run shot in the fourth.

Sports

"I averaged 1.6 minutes a game," Williams said.

"I didn't get to play but that was probably because of the ankle injury," he said. "A lot of teams that have good veterans don't play rookies." He cited Norm Cook, former basketball player at the University of Kansas as an example. Cook, who just completed his rookie year with the Boston Celtics, didn't see much playing time, either.

Williams said his plans for the off-season may include completing his schooling at K-State.

"I'll probably go to summer school," Williams said. "If I don't, I'll play some summer leagues or some basketball camps. I only need 12 hours to complete my degree in rec (recreation) and advertising."

WILLIAMS DIDN'T know if he would be working at his former coach Jack Hartman's summer basketball camp.

"That may be a possibility but we haven't discussed it yet," he said.

Williams had the chance to go pro in his junior year, but decided against it.

"San Antonio was interested in me but I never got details because I wanted to finish my senior year," he said. "I think there are a couple of players (at K-State) that have the capability (to go hardship) but they should stay in school."

In his three-year career at K-State (he was ineligible his freshman year), Williams scored 1,364 points. At that time, he was the second-leading scorer of all time behind Bob Boozer's 1,685. Since then he's been surpassed by former teammate Mike Evans, whose 1,560 took the second scoring spot this year.

In 1975, Williams scored 47 points against Holy Cross for most points scored in one game and 22 field goals for the most in that category.

HE SCORED 290 field goals in the 1974-75 season and 560 in the two 1974-76 seasons. His career high in field goals is 621.

In 1976, Williams was named District 5 All-Star team, UPI's All-Big Eight first team, honorable mention AP all-America basketball team, Citizens Savings Athletic Foundation all-America team for the second consecutive year, Converse All-America and Sporting News second team All-American.

Following his last season at K-State, he was selected to play in the Second Annual Kansas-Missouri College Senior all-Star game, the Pizza Hut Classic for the west team, the Aloha Classic for the midwest team and the National Association of Basketball Coaches All-Star game for the west team, where he was named most valuable player. Williams played in all but the Kansas-Missouri game.

Following his successful college career, Williams did have some ups in his first professional season.

"My most exciting moment was when I got six points against Philadelphia," he said. "The play-by-play announcer said if I would have played 48 minutes every game I would have averaged 32 points. It was a little joke." Williams played six minutes in the Philadelphia game.

WILLIAMS DOESN'T see any definite plans after he leaves the pros since he is planning on 10-year career in basketball. He said he would like to go into private business after the pros.

Earlier this year, it was rumored that Williams had been traded from Cleveland and he explained the mix-up.

"There are two Chuck Williams," he said. "He got traded from Denver to Buffalo while all the time the 'real' Chuckie Williams was in Cleveland."

Williams said his goal is to be all-pro guard for Cleveland next year.

So is Chuckie ready to give pro basketball another shot?

"Nine more years," he said.

Men's rugby finishes year

K-State men's rugby team lost 9-7 to Topeka in the Fourth Annual Sunflower Tournament this weekend, eliminating them early from competition.

"We got ahead and got cocky. They scored and we didn't have time to catch up," said Ed Bischoff, president.

The men have never won the tournament although they have placed second twice.

Topeka finished second overall with the Kansas City Blues winning the event. There were 16 teams participating in the tournament. They were Houston Boars, Queen City Rugby Club from Denver, St. Louis Highlanders, Tulsa Rugby Club, Oklahoma City Rugby Club, Omaha, three teams in addition to the Blues from the Kansas City area—River Quay, Kansas City Rugby Club and Johnson County Bulls—University of Kansas, Emporia, K-State B squad and Wichita.

The K-State team finished the season 10-2.

"That's the best record K-State's ever had. More guys played this year than ever before. We played a B game every weekend. This is the first year we've ever been able to do that," Bischoff said.

Two starters are graduating this May, Bill Sinovic and Rocky Osborn.

"We're really gonna miss Sinovic because of his toe," he said.

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.

2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next Fall during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Ghosts: the dead may still be with us

By VELINA HOUSTON

Features Editor

Is there another dimension—earthly or unearthly—just as real but not as visible as ours?

You don't have to be a kook to answer yes. Many level-headed, intelligent people believe there is and don't hesitate to say so.

Even K-State has its resident ghosts, according to students and faculty who were willing to recount their experiences. Perhaps the most famous is "Nick," the ghost who haunts the Purple Masque theater in East Stadium.

Legend has it three ghosts reside in the Purple Masque—Nick and two pioneer girls who died in the vicinity of East Stadium in the 'old prairie days.'

Pam Evers, junior in theater, said the story she had heard was that the girls' father returned to find his family and home had burned and then killed himself in anguish.

The Purple Masque used to house the athletes back in the early 1950s.

"THE STORY I heard was that a football player was hit in the diaphragm during a game, went into convulsions and choked to death," said Allison Dollar, junior in theater and modern languages.

"Supposedly, he died in what used to be the old dorm's cafeteria," Dollar said. "He is still hanging around the Masque."

Cindy Helferstay, graduate student in speech-theater, said a medium was brought into the Masque to call forth Nick.

"Records confirm these people (Nick and the girls) really existed," she said.

Kay Coles, senior in journalism, used to be a theater major. She recalled an experience in the spring of 1971 which lacked logical explanation.

SHE AND another student were in the scene shop of the Masque. Her companion had just finished said. Two students supposedly disappeared. It was rumored they were killed and their spirits haunt the house.

Special Effects

"It was a general consensus when I was living there that something existed, but stories get passed along through the years and change," he said.

He said in between the dorm section and living room of the house, there was a door that could be heard whenever it moved. Frequently, fraternity brothers would hear it open and footsteps cross the living room.

"We would search and search

THE STRANGEST of the Fiji stories occurred in the house library where pledge paddles used to hang.

"The paddles were taken down to paint the walls and all except one paddle kept bleeding through," Dawdy said. "Supposedly this was Duncan's paddle. We had to cover the walls with paneling."

"In the fall of 1974, some housebrothers had a seance in the library. When they asked for a sign from Duncan, one of the brother's fingernails turned a luminous green color. They all saw it."

Diane Dollar, K-State art instructor, told of an experience a fellow faculty member had with automatic writing.

Automatic writing, Dollar explained, is when one blanks out the mind and calls upon any spirit to enter one's body and communicate by taking over the hand and writing.

"I won't mention the professor's name," Dollar said, "but it was this person's first experience with automatic writing."

"The spirit who came gave her name and her address. She said she had died in agony and that she had murdered her husband. It was questionable because 'died in agony' is a Victorian phrase."

A STUDENT checked the Riley County records and found the woman's name. She had been buried in 1912 with an infant. Her husband was listed as having been buried in 1911. Dollar then went to check the records herself and said she found all the facts to be true.

"The enormous number of unusual occurrences make an overwhelming impression," said Robert Linder, instructor of a history of witchcraft and the occult class. One theory he offered was the poltergeist.

"Poltergeist means noisy spirit," he said. "The phenomena nearly always happens with young children because they have the ability to affect movement of objects—some kind of energy unspoiled by modern education and rationality."

"A lot of unusual visions are real, but still created out of our own minds. We actually see things," he said.

LINDER also mentioned the telepathic communication theory by which a person communicates between this dimension and another dimension.

People who don't believe just say believers are deranged or under great stress when unexplainable things occur, he said.

A K-State student and Salina Central High School graduate who did not wish to be identified told of the ghost who haunts that high school's auditorium.

"It was around Christmas years back," she said. "We were doing the play 'Death Takes a Holiday' and there was a part in it where a girl was decapitated in a car accident."

"The girl never got to play her part and was replaced by her understudy. Before opening night she was in a car accident and decapitated just like the character in the play."

According to the source, the actress' ghost returns whenever a play opens. Technical workers and light crews have reported seeing a white shadow or the auditorium seats flopping down all at once.

PEOPLE are more likely to complain of hearing things instead of seeing things, said Bob Sinnett, director of mental health services at Lafene.

"Auditory reports are more common," he said. "You have to take each case individually and recognize that one can have all sorts of beliefs and altered states of consciousness and still not be impaired.

"If there is some other support for one's beliefs, then we retain them."

Sinnett said many times when one is falling asleep or awakening, one has dream-like experiences that seem crazy. He said they may be extensions of phenomena experienced during sleep, not to be confused with rational everyday waking experiences.

Psychics, insanity, pranks, poltergeist or 'just a ghost'? Visions and other unnatural occurrences are not something to dismiss with the blink of an eye nor to play around with.

One can attempt to explain the theories and phenomena religiously and logically—and then what?

working with the sound system, turned off the equipment and locked up the theater.

"Suddenly music started playing," Coles said. "My partner unlocked the theater and the sound was back on. He turned off the tape and locked all the doors. It came on four more times. We looked around for someone playing a joke, but there wasn't a soul around."

Nick used to record on the tapes, Helferstay said.

"He was friends with Dave, a soundperson," she said. "Sometimes when the tape was played back, you'd hear a 'Hi, Dave,' and there was never any explanation for it."

Coles recalled another story in which a hired crew put chairs in the Masque to be set up later. While working outside, they heard commotion in the theater. They ran to look and found the chairs set up with programs on them.

"There was no explanation and no individuals around," Coles said. "It happened in five minutes and it usually takes people at least a half an hour to perform such a task."

IF YOU are scared of ghosts, the Purple Masque isn't the only place on campus to avoid. Legend has it the Phi Kappa Tau and Phi Gamma Delta houses are haunted. The houses are located next door to each other.

A former president of Phi Kappa Tau who asked not to be identified believes in a presence, but isn't sure how the ghost came to be or who it is.

In the 1930's, the house was a boarding house for students, he but no one was there," he said. "Often we would hear a tapping at the basement window and look out to see a ball of light hovering right outside."

HE TOLD another story of a light in the basement that would turn on by itself.

"We'd always turn off this light in the boiler room before going to bed and then lock the door," he said. "Then we'd go brush our teeth and come back to find the door open and the light on. It happened consistently, without explanation and it wasn't natural."

Before 1965, another fraternity that occupied what is now the Phi Gamma Delta house had a pledge who died there, said Dave Dawdy, junior in agriculture. "Duncan" is his ghost's name—and there are different stories about his death.

One story says the pledge was put in a coffin during initiation and smothered to death. Another says he fell or was pushed down the stairs. Still another says the fraternity went through hazing and was going to paddle him but he turned and was hit fatally in the head.

"You have to take the ghost stories with a grain of salt," Dawdy said. "But with all the stories going around, it's pretty unnerving to stay by yourself in this house."

Dilapidated homes get facelift from CD

By JULIE DOLL
Collegian Reporter

Substandard housing is being combated in Manhattan by the federally funded Community Development (CD) program, aimed at improving existing structures but is also involved in acquiring dilapidated houses and relocating the occupants.

Grants and loans are the highest priorities for the program, Marvin Butler, CD director, said. Grants are available for applicants who don't have sufficient funds to repay a loan. The maximum grant is $5,000. Loans are intended for low and moderately-low income families; the maximum loan is $12,000. The maximum term for a CD loan is 20 years with three per cent.

OFTEN a combination loan-grant is acquired by the applicant. The John Reich family, 1315 Houston, has a $5,000 loan and a $5,000 grant. A Manhattan contractor spent more than a month working on the house putting up paneling, building kitchen cabinets and a closet, lowering the ceiling in several rooms, installing an upstairs bathroom, and putting on a new roof. The Reichs are doing most of the painting and wall papering themselves.

"I'd say there has been a substantial decrease in the amount of substandard housing," Butler said. "More than 200 substandard units have been eliminated since the program began three years ago."

A 1977 study by a Wichita firm showed more than 600 houses in Manhattan are substandard. Most of the units found to be substandard are in an area south of Bluemont Street and east of 17th Street. This is the target area of the redevelopment program.

Many of the structures rented to students are substandard, but the owners of the structures don't meet the requirements for CD loans or grants.

"It's very rare for any person owning tenements to get a loan," Butler said. "Anyone who owns two or three tenements has an income too high to meet the standards for CD loans and grants."

"The problem there is that the city needs to utilize the housing codes," he said.

THE GUIDELINES for receiving CD funds are an annual gross income of less than $9,000 for the head of a household of four people, or less than $8,000 for a family of three.

Between 45 and 50 families have been "directly affected" by the program since it began, Butler said.

This is the third year that Manhattan will receive federal CD funding. Before CD, Manhattan had a neighborhood improvement program. About $122,000 has been loaned to 21 families from CD funds. Another $167,000 has gone to 31 families in grants.

An additional $370,000 has been spent on acquisition and relocation, Butler said, adding acquisition is used as a "last resort" in redevelopment.

"Most of the units that are bought by the city are dilapidated (beyond repair). The only exception would be a structure in an area where a housing project is being built."

"We're now shifting our policy to conserving houses, instead of the country-wide policy a few

Town still suffers after family's death

LINCOLN, Kan. (AP)—Three members of the Leonard Wiebke family will be buried Wednesday, but their deaths will not be forgotten soon by their neighbors.

"It's a nightmare," Lincoln County Sheriff Don Panzer said of the slayings. "The people here can't get over it. They can't believe it happened to their friends and neighbors."

Leonard Wiebke, 59, his wife, Esther, 59, and their son, Terry, 19, were shot at close range and killed Saturday by a man who held them hostage at their farm home near this quiet north-central Kansas community.

THEY WERE shot by John Steward, a 28-year-old ex-convict who then shot and killed himself. Steward, who was released from the Missouri state prison in December after serving six months of a sentence for assault, was being pursued for questioning in the Friday night shooting death of a woman in St. Louis when he went to the Wiebke home.

"A lot of people have started locking their doors," Panzer said of the immediate reaction of the townspeople of Lincoln. "It takes something like this to get people to take precautions."

The sheriff said it probably will never be possible to determine positively why the Wiebkes were shot. He recalled that he had negotiated by telephone with Steward during the four hours that the Wiebkes were held hostage and that an agreement had been reached for him to release the family and leave the scene in the Wiebke car.

Union to serve graduation buffet

The K-State Union will serve a Commencement Banquet before and after commencement exercises May 20.

In past years, Manhattan restaurants haven't been able to accommodate the extra persons attending commencement, said Terry Adams, Union Food Service director.

The buffet dinner will be served from 4:45 to 6 p.m. and from 8 to 9:30 p.m. All tickets are reserved and must be purchased by this Friday. Tickets are $5 for adults and $2.50 for children under 12, and may be obtained in the Union Food Service Office.

years ago acquiring all structures in a community, tearing them down and starting over," he said.

One of the main concerns of the city is finding a place for the family to live after their house has been acquired, Butler said.

THE FAMILY receives the price their property was appraised at plus a $15,000 grant. Ideally this is enough money for the family to relocate, Butler said.

If occupants are tenants of a house being acquired, they receive a grant of $4,500 to relocate. Most of the structures acquired by the city are occupied.

"Manhattan does have public housing, but the supply falls short of the demand," Butler said. "Few people can be placed in public housing because there are simply not enough units," he said.

Next year's budget calls for $250,000 to be available in loans and grants and about $225,000 for acquisition and relocation. There is still about $200,000 left to be budgeted into loans and grants this year for redevelopment.

Students dedicate room to professor

The former Green Room in West Stadium has been changed to a memorial art gallery and dedicated to Gerald Deibler, an associate professor of art who died last month.

The room, formerly a lecture and slide room, was refurbished by some of the advanced painting students with materials purchased mainly by the students.

"The gallery was something that he always wanted to have in the department," said Joe Milosevich, assistant professor of painting.

"Gerry was an important person to his students, kind of a figurehead of painting," he said.

The art work now hanging in the gallery is from Deibler's advanced painting students.

Milosevich said students occupied a large part of Deibler's time and energy and therefore the main function of the gallery is to display student work.

"We are going to try to keep it occupied all of the time," he said, and summer displays will include work from Painting I, II and III classes and the water color class.

The memorial gallery is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Thursday.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: If a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Skelton scheduled for concert; tickets on sale this summer

Comedian Red Skelton will be featured at a Parent's Day concert next fall, Rob Cieslicki, Union Program Council (UPC) adviser, announced Tuesday.

Skelton will perform Saturday, Sept. 17, in Ahearn Field House. His appearance is sponsored by the UPC Concerts Committee.

"A lot of people brought him (Skelton) up after seeing him on the Academy Awards," Cieslicki said. "I don't know what he's going to do, since the whole idea of his going on tour is new."

Tickets for the show, priced from $5 to $7, will be available through a mailer which will be sent this summer to parents of K-State students, faculty and staff. Tickets will also be sold in Manhattan after fall classes begin.

THERE WILL be a display of Skelton's artwork in the Union Courtyard the weekend of the concert and he will conduct a "Comic Residency" on campus the day before the concert.

Skelton will be accompanied by Joy Lober, a female singer who is currently touring with Burt Bacharach.

Cieslicki said the concerts committee is looking to have more rock concerts at K-State next year—possibly as many as three each semester. He said he has talked to such performers as Linda Ronstadt, Eagles, Barry Manilow, The Beach Boys and Fleetwood Mac. No offers, however, can be made until groups announce their tour schedules. Schedules are usually announced two months before tours begin, he said.

"This year's attendance has proven that we can support a group," Cieslicki said.

A record amount of tickets—33,666—was sold for K-State concerts this year.

"I think we have an asset with the K-State crowd," said Irene Parsons, UPC concerts coordinator. "You treat them (the groups) right and they'll come back."

K-STATE CAN'T compete financially for top-money performers, Cieslicki said. Neil Diamond wanted $100,000 for a one-night K-State performance, but it would have been impossible to break even, Cieslicki said.

The Doobie Brothers received about $32,500 for its April 30 K-State concert. An extra $16,800 was spent to promote the concert and house the band during its stay, including a $400 dinner for the Doobie Brothers, Foreigner and their stage crew, Cieslicki said.

Carter advises improvements for NATO forces in Europe

LONDON (AP)—President Carter warned the North Atlantic alliance Tuesday it should toughen up to match Communist buildup of an offensive force in Europe.

Carter then flew back home after his weekend economic summit with six other world leaders.

CARTER said the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) should make "high priority improvements" in the European forces, report on progress in December and submit a full program to a NATO summit next spring in Washington.

The President spoke to a NATO ministerial meeting in the Lancaster House near Parliament. He spent the rest of the day meeting with prime ministers of NATO countries.

Carter was blunt in his speech. "The threat facing the alliance has grown steadily in recent years," he said. "The Soviet Union has achieved essential nuclear equivalence. Its theater nuclear forces have been strengthened.

"THE WARSAW Pact's conventional forces in Europe emphasize an offensive posture. These forces are much stronger than needed for any defense purpose.

"Since 1965, new ground and air weapons have been introduced in most major categories: self-propelled artillery, mobile tactical missiles, mobile air defense guns, armored personnel carriers, tactical aircraft and tanks."

Over the past five days, here and in Geneva, Carter met with such leaders as President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt of West Germany and President Hafez Assad of Syria.

LONDON'S main event—a seven-nation economic summit attended by leaders of the Western industrial nations—ended with the participants pledging to do whatever it takes to attain established goals in economic growth and reduce inflation and unemployment.

Bond chain letter violates federal mail fraud statutes

By DAN WILLIAMS
SGA Editor

A chain letter-type operation currently circulating in Manhattan, which promises up to $50,000 to participants, violates federal mail fraud statutes, a United States Postal Service investigator in Topeka said Tuesday.

The operation differs from normal chain letters in that nothing but the money—$25 saving bonds—goes through the mail. United States Postal Investigator W. D. Hawkins said mailing the bonds still constitutes fraud.

THE OPERATION has been under investigation by the Topeka office for about a month, Hawkins said. He also said the scheme is currently widespread across Kansas. Anyone who mails the bonds as part of the operation could be arrested.

"If any portion of the scheme goes through the mail, it violates our fraud statutes," Hawkins said.

Even if the bonds aren't mailed, the operation probably violates Kansas fraud statutes, he said.

The chain consists of a list of 10 names which must be purchased for $37.50, an instruction sheet and a $25 savings bond. The buyer mails the attached savings bond to the person to whom it is made out, then makes two copies of the instruction sheet, adding his name to the bottom of the 10-name list and crossing off the name at the top.

The buyer then purchases two $25 savings bonds, at $1875, endorsed with the name of the person who headed the first list. To complete the chain, the buyer must then sell the new list, along with the two savings bonds, for $37.50 to two more people.

THE INSTRUCTION sheet claims the buyer could receive up to $51,160 by participating in the chain. K-State Consumer Relations Board Director Brenda West said she thinks otherwise.

"Those people tenth on the list—there's no way they'll make that money," West said. "It's the people at the beginning of the list that make the money. According to my knowledge of chain letters or mail fraud, this is mail fraud."

If the buyer can sell the two new lists, he will lose no money. Selling the two lists would bring in $75 and cover the cost of buying the original list and the two savings bonds.

Palace Drug

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OKLAHOMA CITY—Gov. David Boren signed the drug execution bill Wednesday, making Oklahoma the first state to enact such a law.

The bill, which provides for execution of condemned criminals by lethal drug injections, is similar to one passed by the Texas Legislature last week, but the Texas bill has not been signed into law.

The bill, as enacted, provided for electrocutions or death by firing squads in case the courts invalidated the death-by-drug method.

The state has electrocuted condemned criminals in the past, but Sen. Bill Dawson (D-Seminole) the bill's principal author, contended the drug execution method would be more humane.

WASHINGTON—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted Tuesday to partially lift the trade embargo against Cuba to permit that nation to purchase agricultural, food and medical supplies in the U.S. market.

However, it balked at opening U.S. markets to exports of sugar and other Cuban agricultural products after senators heard arguments that such a step would give away an important bargaining chip in continuing negotiations with the government of President Fidel Castro.

The amendment passed by the committee would permit Cuba to purchase medical supplies and such agricultural products as rice, oats, barley and wheat in the United States. It would be a significant benefit to the Cubans in that it would greatly reduce shipping costs. Cuba is only 90 miles from the U.S. coastline.

OKLAHOMA CITY—Anyone in the United States who wants to import the substance Laetrile must have a copy of a special affidavit a federal judge composed Tuesday.

Both backers and opponents of the substance, billed as a cancer cure but banned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, claimed victory at the end of the two-day hearing conducted by U.S. District Court Judge Luther Bohanon.

In general, the affidavit spells out the conditions Bohanon laid down April 8 for those who want to import Laetrile. But he also added to his original order that the affidavit be signed by a practicing physician in the United States.

TOPEKA—A special task force charged with studying Kansas' water problems completed a two-day organizational session Tuesday with an agreement to begin examining dwindling groundwater supplies in western Kansas.

The task force, made up of representatives of various agencies and groups around the state, heard Monday and Tuesday from experts representing a number of perspectives on the problem of dwindling water supplies in the state.

At the conclusion of the presentations, in which officials discussed problems and recommended solutions, the 26-member panel voted to begin work immediately on the problems facing agriculture in western Kansas because of ground water shortages.

Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith, chairman of the task force, said he felt the groundwater problem was one of the most critical facing the state and a worthy top priority for committee consideration.

WASHINGTON—The Postal Service said Tuesday it is asking the Justice Department to sue the American Medical Association for more than a million dollars in back postage on its weekly journal.

The settlement by Arthur Cahn, assistant general counsel for the mail agency, came after a Postal Service deadline passed on Monday without agreement on the amount of back postage due.

The AMA agrees that is underpaid its postal bills by at least $400,000 but the amount due is in dispute.

Critical editorials serve readers

Several times this semester, the Collegian was asked to publish an editorial supporting some group, event or cause.

Several times, Collegian readers asked why editorials were usually negative and never complimented anyone or any group.

THE ANSWER to the first question was invariably "no," because editorials that support an event, group or cause are free advertisements which do not enlighten readers.

The reason Collegian editorials were almost always critical is simple—positive editorials don't accomplish anything.

They don't point out a problem, criticize faulty governmental decisions or speak for a minority which may be pushed aside by the approval of the majority on an issue.

POSITIVE editorials don't stimulate constructive discussion or show the various aspects of a problem.

Most of all, positive editorials show a newspaper is willing to ignore problems to highlight the good.

Positive aspects will exist and probably flourish while neglected, but problems will only worsen if left unattended.

TO SERVE its readers, a newspaper must be a leader—with the courage to recognize and deal with problems.

A newspaper can best serve its readers by pointing out problems and inequities and commenting on them.

Allowing problems to pass unnoticed is the worst disservice a newspaper can do its readers.

Reflections on news coverage

Without the market forces of rising and falling subscription numbers, the only gauge of public reaction to the Collegian appears on this page—letters to the editor.

As a qualified armchair statistician, it seems to me that the most prevalent complaint this semester concerned Collegian coverage of student activities, especially minority news events.

ON THE one hand, there is a strong journalistic reason for avoiding extensive coverage of minority news. (If one were to make a pilgrimage to the Mountain of Divine Journalistic Truth, one would find there a Holy Headline which reads, "BE FAIR.")

To heavily cover minority events would be to give far more weight to one (admittedly small) part of the campus community at the expense of other parts. A fair balance of coverage would be upset.

In other words, and blunt words they are, if minority groups are getting screwed, they are getting screwed no more than anyone else.

That is one rationale. But before someone begins checking my wallet for a Ku Klux Klan membership card, let me quickly add that this is just one part of the story.

IT'S NOT clear that current Collegian coverage screws everyone fairly. That is, minority news may not be covered enough even when compared to the number of minority students on campus. My armchair statistics fall apart at this point. How do you determine how much coverage is "enough?"

The plain fact is the ideal of "fair coverage" becomes horribly complicated when threatened with practical application. Yet that is no cause for stalemate.

The Collegian should make every possible attempt to increase its coverage of minority events. The reason is fairly simple: Most of us know too little about minority concerns.

Hence reports on the activities of minority groups will tend to be more informative, more enlightening (than traditional stories) to a great number of people.

After all, the University does claim to be a compendium of diverse opinions and views. Additional minority coverage can only bolster that claim.

Epilogue

I shall now do something I have never done before. In times past, I have always quietly resigned from positions of gainful employment. But I have long fantasized about "going out with a bang," so to speak. Thus:

I quit! I resign. I'm walking out in a huff. I've had it, no more for me. Finished. Ended. Kaput. Do you hear?

Letters to the editor

Moon's 'bargain deal' questionable

Editor,

I too was accosted in the Union parking lot about 11 p.m. May 3. His face was innocent and he was carrying a box of candy.

"Hello, hello, hello . . . What a lucky person you are . . . Will you buy some candy as a donation to our Christian youth group?"

"No, not tonight," I said twice. "God bless you," was the reply that he finished halfway across the parking lot toward his next customer.

THE TWO-YEAR-OLD memory of my experience with the Unification Church (Sun Myung Moon's cult) sickened me again.

He could not have been a "Moonie" for long. His eyes were still bright and not yet fearful. He was 18 at the oldest. I wanted to say something but two blocks later my mouth could only repeat, "No, not tonight."

Let me warn students while they can still be receptive. Religious people are very dangerous. They are like pleasant, fraudulent sales people asking you to exchange your life for a bargain deal.

No obligation after lifetime guarantee. Your life will be refunded if not completely satisfied (your money won't). However, you must complete our program before a refund can be made.

THE FACT is that only the person himself can refund his life back. The cult's program (which is exactly that) trains its victim that a full-life refund is only possible through their means.

Their means, of course, are the church doctrine. People will do almost anything to redeem their life after being convinced it is lost.

He was so innocent selling candy in the parking lots. But please remember it is through these contacts that cultists can acquire eventual converts.

These are ways to make one a believer against his will and without physical force.

Most of us have had the experience of buying an item after a sales pitch only to realize its undesirability too late. This is believability on a short-term basis.

A POPULAR time for cultic sales is when the campus is relatively quiet as intersession and vacations.

If this happens, DO NOT attend such sales meetings. Rather, good books on the general subject are: "Battle for the Mind" by William Sargant and "The True Believer" by Eric Hoffer.

Ahearn idea brilliant

Editor

Re: Bob Page's letter "Ahearn alternate site" in Thursday's Collegian.

This idea to make Ahearn into the recreation complex and build a new fieldhouse is brilliant!

I suggested the same thing in a letter to the editor over a month ago, but they didn't consider it worth printing!

I'm glad the idea has finally reached publication and want to emphasize with you that students need to vocalize their support for this proposal.

Why settle for just a new rec complex when we could also have the new fieldhouse we so desperately need?

Actions unimpressive

Editor,

Re: Jett Anderson's article in Friday's Collegian and Cindy Thomas' letter in Monday's Collegian.

Obviously the Collegian, as well as Jett Anderson, is extremely proud of its article about the Student Tribunal. However, its representation there wasn't impressive.

Prior to tribunal Jett Anderson led us to believe, after stating that he was "the only one who could keep us from being screwed," that the tribunal would not give us a fair hearing.

At the beginning of the hearing Anderson was informed the meeting was closed and according to the Student Governing Association Constitution he could not be present.

HE WAS then asked to leave and as a representative of the Collegian he replied "no" and then stated "I don't believe in the SGA Constitution."

Apparently the Collegian doesn't believe in the constitution of the students yet it continues to accept the students' money to fund itself which seems somewhat ironic.

We personally feel the tribunal was fair and we respect it as the highest judicial board of the University and we feel the Collegian should also.

We also believe Cindy Thomas' attitude towards the SGA reporters might be different if she knew more of the way they cover a story rather than the final article which the Collegian prints.

Editor,

Re: The Collegian editorial page.

The Collegian editorials are overly concerned, it seems, with putting down and criticizing the aspects of American life which, though it be unbeknownst to you, many of us enjoy.

CHEAP shots at exams, grades and other high learning necessities are unwarranted. Sure, the Collegian is a school newspaper, but it should also be very, very intelligent.

The press has a responsibility to represent everyone, not just those people who happen to understand it.

High Blood Pressure
The "Silent Killer"

Millions of people have high blood pressure and are unaware that they have the disease. It is a leading cause of disease and death in this country, and it will contribute to the death of 250,000 people this year. It can result in stroke, heart failure or kidney failure and is a risk factor in coronary artery disease. Wednesday and Thursday of this week there will be a free high blood pressure screening at Lafene Student Health Center. Students, Faculty and Staff may have their blood pressure checked either day.

Wednesday May 11, from the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses

this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next Fall during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Speed use increases for final week

By DENISE NICKLE
Collegian Reporter

For many K-State students final week means staying awake for days, and cramming to catch-up on studies put off during the semester.

It may also mean coffee, No Doz, speed or other stimulants.

JEFF MORRIS, assistant director of the Drug Education Center (DEC), said students should try to plan study times for the week and if they have to take speed, they should keep the amount low and watch nutrition.

Amphetamines lower the intake of nutrition and lower the body's ability to use it. Morris said students who use speed should check into vitamin supplements.

Amphetamines keep people alert for longer periods of time, he said, but comprehension efficiency decreases.

"It's not going to make you any smarter, he said. "It's not going to raise your IQ."

The main effect of speed is emotional, Morris said. It gives a person the feeling he can handle anything.

A student may leave a test bragging how easy it was and find out later he earned a C or D, he said. He also warned that the caffeine in No Doz may cause ulcers.

One student said speed doesn't help her study, but keeps her active.

"You're very hyper," she said. "You can't sit down very long and study. You're just moving all the time."

ANOTHER said speed doesn't help him because it doesn't make him study.

"I was having so much fun speeding that I couldn't get into studying enough," he said. "By the time tests come around you're burned out."

"Now I stay up out of fear," he said. "I force myself. If you know you're going to flunk out, you're gonna stay awake."

Morris said drug crisis calls are rare during final week, except for the last two days when people are celebrating.

However, the call-in crisis center, Fone, receives more drug-related calls at the end of the semester, said director Susie Olson.

Government warms to sun energy projects

WASHINGTON (AP)—The federal government announced Tuesday it has selected 80 projects in 33 states to help demonstrate how solar energy can heat and cool commercial buildings.

The Energy Research and Development Administration said it will spend $12.6 million to partially fund the projects, with the average assistance being about $156,000.

ERDA officials said government cost-sharing funds will on the average cover about 68 per cent of the total costs for the 80 projects.

The latest selection is the second phase of a 5-year demonstration program to show the uses of solar energy in heating and cooling nonresidential structures. The first phase was selection of 32 commercial projects in April, 1976.

ERDA said it would ask for a third round of proposals this summer.

"This second series of commercial solar projects will take advantage of improvements in solar technology and also place specific emphasis on energy conservation techniques," said Henry Marvin, director of ERDA's solar energy division.

The new projects include offices, schools, hotels, fire and police stations, hospitals and libraries.

The 80 proposals were selected from 307 submitted last fall. ERDA said it would begin negotiating agreements immediately and expects all contracts to be signed within three months.

MARVIN said many of the projects will be equipped with ERDA monitoring equipment that will collect information on performance of the solar systems.

"I am particularly pleased with the high level of small business participation in these awards," Marvin said.

The official noted 50 per cent of the projects will use solar systems supplied by small businesses. He also said 90 per cent of the money will go to projects with substantial small business involvement in such things as architecture, engineering and construction.

The following projects were among those selected for the solar demonstration program. Included is the estimated cost-share for ERDA.

Kansas: Unified School District 306, school building in Gypsum, $178,655; Solar Services Inc., medical offices in Wichita, $23,952; Ducat Investments Inc., office-warehouse in Kansas City, $265,630; Kaw Valley State Bank and Trust Co., detached facility in Topeka, $75,166.

Scratched car gives clue in wealthy widow murder

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—A tip that a man paid $13,500 cash for a new car and then tried to trade it in because it was scratched led to the arrest of three persons and recovery of $1.6 million in the "wealthy widow" robbery-murder case, police said Tuesday.

Police said they were seeking two other persons and an estimated $1.4 million still missing in the bizarre case.

Lt. Robert Kirkman said the suspects may have given away some of the money to friends.

AUTHORITIES said the victim, 66-year-old grocery chain heiress Marjorie Jackson, had withdrawn about $8 million from banks. More than $5 million in cash was found Saturday, hidden in a garbage can, a toolbox, closets and a vacuum cleaner bag at the woman's fire-charred home.

Held under first-degree murder, first-degree arson and first-degree burglary charges was Manuel Lee Robinson, 29, of Indianapolis. Annie Young, 22, who lives in the same block as Robinson, was charged with possessing stolen property. John Williams, 38, Indianapolis, was charged with being an accessory after the fact.

All three live about 10 miles from the affluent suburban area where Jackson lived.

Marion County Sheriff Donald Gilman said the break in the case came Monday morning when he received a call from an attorney for a car dealer who said Robinson had paid cash, in new $100 bills in numerical sequence, for a 1977 Lincoln Continental last Thursday.

THE ATTORNEY called again Monday afternoon to report that Robinson and Williams were back at the dealership trying to trade the car because it had scratches on the front, Gilman said.

The two left without making a trade and were followed for several hours by more than 20 police officers in cars and a helicopter before the arrests were made.

Police said they found the $1.6 million in a brown briefcase, a blue suitcase and a blue flight bag. They declined to specify who the items belonged to.

Authorities said after leaving the auto dealership, Robinson and Williams put a $300 deposit on two more new Lincolns at another dealer and then test drove a car at a third dealership.

A man and a woman still sought in the case were believed to have left the city Saturday, driving another new Lincoln with a house trailer, detectives said.

Police said they found several pieces of jewelry, believed stolen from the Jackson home, in a paper sack guarded by a large dog in Robinson's backyard. The jewelry included rings, necklaces and watches—one item containing 55 diamonds, detectives said.

Authorities believe Jackson, who was shot once in the abdomen, died sometime Thursday or Friday.

The fire was set early Saturday, apparently in an attempt to cover up the robbery and murder, police said.

Spring snow leaves New England powerless

BOSTON (AP)—Hundreds of thousands of homes were without electricity across southern New England Tuesday after a freak storm scattered tree limbs and power lines across a snow-covered spring landscape.

Newly opened lilac blossoms pushed by snow and white-covered trees in full foliage created a bizarre mixture of midspring and winter, just weeks after the region emerged from its worst winter on record.

The National Weather Service said the storm, which pounded much of New England with high winds, snow, sleet and rain Monday and Tuesday, left record snow depths for this time of year, ranging to 15 inches in parts of Massachusetts.

UP TO TWO feet of snow was unofficially reported in towns at higher elevations in the Berkshire Mountains of western Massachusetts.

Eight inches fell in sections of Rhode Island, the latest measurable snow on record there, and the half-inch remaining on the ground in Boston also set a record for so late in the spring.

Power failures were widespread in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and parts of Connecticut as the heavy wet snow and high winds ripped down tree boughs that tore through electric lines.

Boston Edison Co. reported that 100,000 of its customers in the greater Boston area were without power Tuesday morning, and repair crews from companies in neighboring states were called in to supplement the utility's 88 crews on the road.

A MAJOR transmission line belonging to the New England Power Exchange was out for several hours Tuesday, cutting off power to much of southeastern Massachusetts and parts of Rhode Island. Cape Cod and the cities of New Bedford, Fall River and Quincy were blacked out.

Schools remained closed in parts of Massachusetts and Rhode Island on Tuesday, as highway crews bolted plows back onto trucks and sought to clear roads. State police had to resort to a snowmobile to reach a truck that jackknifed on the Mohawk Trail highway in the Berkshires town of Florida.

APPLE GROWERS feared freezing temperatures would cut their $10 million crop in Massachusetts. Shade-leaf tobacco farmers there and in Connecticut said wind and snow damage to gauze canopies shading fields would delay the spring planting.

An official of a Connecticut tobacco growers association said a modest damage estimate was $1.5 million for the two states, most of it in Connecticut.

Norton favored over Bobick

NEW YORK (AP)—Ken Norton, who believes in the theory of mind over matter, and Duane Bobick, untested but outwardly undaunted about his first big test as a pro, fight tonight in Madison Square Garden.

"Your mind has to be ready," Norton said. "Anything the mind can conceive, the body can achieve."

So far, he has twice failed to achieve the heavyweight championship of the world, being knocked out in the second round by George Foreman and losing a disputed 15-round decision to Muhammad Ali. And a loss to Bobick would almost certainly put that achievement beyond Norton's reach.

"Once the bell rings everything is great," was the unbeaten Bobick's reaction when asked how he felt before this major test which would make him a boxing "gold mine" in terms of appeal for a fight with Ali. The champion is openly rooting for Bobick.

BOBICK NOT only is unbeaten, but he would be billed as a "White Hope," a label he disdains, pointing out his manager, former champion Joe Frazier, and trainer, Eddie Futch, are black.

Sports

Futch, who once trained Norton, agreed with his former charge that mental condition is important and he thinks Bobick's frame of mind has been helped by the postponement of the bout. It originally was scheduled for March 2 but was postponed when Bobick suffered torn rib cartilage while sparring with brother Rodney.

"It helped him a great deal because during the layoff he was preparing himself mentally," said Futch.

Norton disagreed. "I think it would have been more advantageous to Bobick to fight the first time," Norton said, adding that he got himself motivated during the layoff.

NORTON WEIGHED in Tuesday at 222½ pounds for the scheduled 12-round fight. He weighed 217½ when he lost to Ali Sept. 28. Bobick weighed 215½.

The fight will be televised nationally by NBC from 9-11:30 p.m., EDT, with the main event set for about 10:30.

Norton was a 12-5 favorite locally and his edge would seem to be based on the strength of having met better fighters.

"Who's he fought," is the knock against Bobick, who has 38-0 record with 32 knockouts.

BUT FUTCH notes that Norton "outside of the fights with Ali and Foreman (Norton lost two of three against Ali) hasn't fought anybody better than Duane has fought. Quarry (Norton stopped Quarry in five rounds in 1975) had come out of retirement and had 10 days to get ready for the fight. I made most of the other fights so I know."

Norton, who has a 37-4-0 record, fought Larry Middleton last year before his fight with Ali and stopped him on a cut mouth in the 10th round. Middleton is the only common opponent, having lost a lopsided 10-round decision to Bobick early last year, and he thinks Bobick will beat Norton.

What about Nevada?

KANSAS CITY (AP)—The NCAA's weekend announcements that Hawaii, Texas A&M and North-Carolina Central had been placed on various degrees or probation leaves one burning question in the minds of basketball devotees everywhere.

What about Vegas?
What about the Runnin' Rebels of Nevada-Las Vegas, the team voted most likely to get the axe after Coach Jerry Tarkanian made a hurried trip to appear before the Infractions Committee here in March?

Donald Baepier, UNLV president, acknowledged that Tarkanian had flown to Kansas City to meet with the committee, the body that reviews cases and levies penalties.

Angels whip K.C. behind Ryan's arm

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Nolan Ryan fired the 11th two-hitter of his career Tuesday night, giving up only a single and a double to Amos Otis as the California Angels beat the Kansas City Royals 6-1.

The Angels sent eight men to the plate in the seventh inning on the way to scoring three runs as Ryan notched his fifth victory against three losses.

But since then there's not been a word about the Rebels, who placed third in the NCAA Tournament this season with one of the most exciting offensive machines in years.

The NCAA, ever faithful to its policy of keeping mum on pending investigations, is keeping mum. And so is UNLV. Mark Hughes, a spokesman for Baepier, said Tuesday the president could not comment because of NCAA rules.

So now, speculation as to Rebels' fate is running from the ridiculous to the reasonable and include:

- 1—The NCAA's got so much on Vegas it's just taking an extraordinarily long time to piece everything together;
- 2—The investigation was discontinued after turning up nothing;
- 3—Walter Byers has agreed to let Vegas off the hook in return for 10 per cent of the action at one of the craps tables at Caesars Palace;
- 4—The school is proceeding through the routine appeals process and will meet with the NCAA Council in August.

The perfect graduation gift!

There may be GOLD in your closet.

For years, objects of great value have been accumulating in the closets, drawers, basements and bookshelves of Manhattan. Ignored, despised, and long unused, these items could be worth tens of thousands, if only their owners were alert enough to bring them to market!

We're talking about books. Virtually every student has lots of 'em. Of course, almost everybody brings some of their books to the Union to sell every semester. But, a good many more never get to us, because they are forgotten or mis-laid.

So, before you make your trip up to the Union to sell your books, go on a treasure hunt. Check all those nooks and crannies, pile up your discoveries, and cash in. Even books which were discontinued last year could be on the list again. You'll never know until you try.

The Union will be paying those unrivaled high prices again starting May 13th (that's this Friday) and continuing through final week.

K-State English professor publishes poetry collection

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Collegian Reporter

"It is only the presence of death that makes us realize the preciousness of life," poet Wallace Stevens said in "Sunday Morning."

Helen Williams, assistant

Collegian Review

professor of English at K-State, is experiencing this presence and has captured the preciousness in two volumes of poetry, "Soundings" and "Surprise Lillies."

The first volume centers around two main themes—love for people and love for the land, Williams said.

"People are often unsung heroes," Williams said. "I always had an impulse to treasure them in poetry."

WILLIAMS believes that although some writers aim for a particular audience and some write for personal satisfaction, her poetry is a combination of both.

"For me, expressing myself is inseparable from communicating," Williams said.

Love and a search for God are the most written about subjects in poetry, Williams said and she finds herself now writing more about God.

"I don't prescribe anything to anyone. My relationship with God is very personal," Williams said.

She believes that if what she writes touches someone and is good in God's eyes, it is satisfying.

"Surprise Lillies," the second of the books has been reviewed by the Denver Quarterly as a book about living, although death is the central theme.

"The image of 'Surprise Lillies' pulled the book together and now I don't feel I can write a collection of poems," Williams said. "Once I had the experience of writing a book with unity, I knew that was it—I just couldn't write another collection."

"Surprise Lillies" is dedicated in part to Theresa, a member of a cancer discussion group Williams attended last year.

"She showed us how nobly it could be done," Williams said. "She kept on living and absolutely refused self-pity."

MARJORIE, another member of the group and a subject for poetry in "Surprise Lillies," was an inspiration to Williams.

"She said she had been spared for 10 years longer than she was logically supposed to and she kept asking God 'What is this great thing you want me to do?'"

Williams hopes that what she has learned from death, and not death itself, has inspired her poetry in "Surprise Lillies."

"I would like my books to last," Williams said. "They are what I would like to last out of my life."

Williams does not want to write any more about death at this time.

"I think I've said all I want to say on that point. I want to put that subject on the shelf and be a part of the living."

Court restrains Sandstrom estate

TOPEKA (AP)—An order restraining Milda Standstrom or others from disposing of property from her late husband's estate was granted Tuesday while she remained in jail in lieu of bond in the shooting death of Topeka broadcasting executive Thad Sandstrom.

He was found shot to death in his home here a week ago, one day after filing a divorce action. Mrs. Sandstrom has been charged with first degree murder.

The restraining order was granted by Shawnee County District Court Judge Terry Bullock after a scheduled hearing on reduction of Mrs. Sandstrom's bond was called off.

Judge Bullock scheduled a hearing May 17 on a motion for an injunction to replace the temporary restraining order for Tuesday.

GILY'S Landing

ATTENTION KSU STUDENTS!

If you are looking for new excitement and pleasure, we would like to introduce you to Gily's Landing, a new private club which will be in the remodeled, expanded building at 531 North Manhattan (formerly Gily's Seafood Restaurant).

We're excited about our new club. It will be offering the type of menu you've had to drive to Kansas City for—crepes, omelets, quiches, spinach salads, boston lettuce salads, French onion soup and charcoal broiled steaks. Prices will be in the modest range. We'll serve a full selection of cocktails and hi-balls, and will have disco dancing on a large new dance floor in the evenings. We'll be open seven days a week from 11:00 a.m. to 3:00 a.m. Gily's Landing will serve lunches from 11:00 to 2:00 daily, and we're sure you'll like those!

Memberships are $10.95 a year (including sales tax). Since there is a ten day waiting period for private club memberships, we'd like to suggest that you join now. That way, when we open, hopefully July 1, you'll be a member from the very first day of business!

If you would like us to mail you a membership application, or would like more information, please call 539-5790.

MUST BE 21 YEARS OLD. PROOF OF AGE REQUIRED.

We're looking forward to serving you in our new and different club, Gily's Landing.

Students decided to buy own attire

The decision to have seniors buy their own caps and gowns for commencement exercises was a student, not an administrative decision, according to Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

The souvenir caps and gowns have been purchased by the Union Bookstore since 1970, said Mickey Schnedler, supply department manager.

"The senior students made the decision when it was found that the cost of students buying the gowns was only 25 to 50 cents higher than the rental," Gerritz said. "The rentals have the extra problems of having to be ordered, having them delivered to the bookstore, having each student pick theirs up, and after being used, getting them collected, dry-cleaned and sent back.

"The senior students made the decision and relayed it to the bookstore which purchased them for re-sale," Gerritz said.

The souvenir caps and gowns have several advantages, Schnedler said.

"In general, it's less of a hassle for the student. For one, the student doesn't have to come in six to eight weeks ahead of time to order the gown and pay in full with the possibility that for some reason he might not graduate," Schnedler said.

"A second advantage is that if a student decides at the last minute he wants to go through the ceremony the gowns are available at the bookstore until 5 the day of commencement."

The rental cost would be $7.50 to $8.50, but more would have to be charged because of additional people hired to collect the gowns, Schnedler added.

"Students would also be responsible for turning them back in or being charged in full," Schnedler said.

Members of sororities and fraternities could leave their caps and gowns to their houses," Gerritz said.

Good wheat crop ahead for Kansas

TOPEKA (AP)—A near record wheat crop is forecast for Kansas on the basis of May 1 conditions, the Crop and Livestock Reporting Service said Tuesday.

The service forecast a crop of 384 million bushels.

This compares with the 1973 record of 384.8 million bushels.

The forecast assumes normal weather from May 1 until harvest.

But the first week of May provided "excellent" growing conditions in the words of the Crop and Livestock Reporting Service.

If the present forecast is realized, it would be 45 million bushels larger than last year's crop, the third largest of record at 339 million bushel. The second largest crop was in 1975 at 350.9 million bushels.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: If a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Lower compliance estimate won't save Straube house

By JOLENE HOSS
Collegian Reporter

Final hopes to save Straube Scholarship House from closing because of a lower estimate for the cost of complying with fire regulations have dimmed with University clarification of the necessary funding to repair the house and make it comply with fire codes.

The decision to close Straube was made last March by University officials. Housing director, Thomas Frith said in January the house was going to close in May because of the cost of repairs necessary to meet state fire regulations and residence hall standards.

STRAUBE PRESIDENT, Richard Arpin, sophomore in agronomy, said the state's deputy fire marshal inspected Straube and said he thought the University's figure for compliance with the fire code was too high.

"I told him they (the University) had made an estimate of $25,000. He said it was an outrageous figure. He thought $10,000 was more of a considerate figure," Arpin said.

Frith said the fire code inspection was not what caused the closing of Straube. The building's need of repair and a lack of funds closed the building.

"Since there is no continuance fund," Arpin said, "it would be hard to continue Straube. We don't feel there is anything we can do about it since the decision has already been made."

STATE DEPUTY Fire Marshal, Frederick Hoblin said Wednesday he had not inspected the entire house, but from what he did see he thought the $25,000 figure was high.

"Apparently there were a few discrepancies as to what the fire marshal requires and the college was including," he said.

"The deputy fire marshal is an expert in fire protection," Frith said, "but I don't know how familiar he is as far as building costs."

"From off the top of my head, as to what we require, I couldn't see where it was going to cost $25,000 to repair the house to meet fire standards," Hoblin said.

"Actually, from what I could see, $10,000 was kind of a ball park figure. The maintenance section at the college probably went into it in more detail."

Jerry Lilly, assistant vice president for student affairs, said the deputy marshal probably only considered the things which had to be repaired to meet the fire code.

"There's a lot of structural things that have to be done to Straube. You have to decide if it (the cost) is worth it," Lilly said.

Flouorocarbons may be banned if government proposal passes

WASHINGTON (AP)—Virtually all fluorocarbon aerosol sprays will disappear from the American market in less than two years if a ban proposed by the government Wednesday becomes law.

Three federal agencies, in an unprecedented joint announcement, said the ban is necessary because the fluorocarbons can damage the earth's ozone layer, which protects life on earth from the potentially skin cancer-causing ultraviolet rays of the sun.

The council Atmospheric Sciences, an industry group, said the mandatory phaseout proposal would require study, but a spokesman denied the ban would save consumers money as the government claimed.

If put into effect, the ban would eliminate nearly 700 million pressurized containers used in spraying deodorants, pesticides, hair sprays, air fresheners and various household cleaners, according to industry figures.

However, it does not mean aerosols would no longer be available. The industry group said fluorocarbon use in aerosols has been declining in recent years and estimated less than 30 per cent of the 2.3 billion aerosols produced in 1976 were powered by fluorocarbons.

Parking: city planners propose solutions to alleviate University problems

By PAUL RHODES
Collegian Reporter

After 45 minutes of restless searching, six gallons of gasoline and a nine-block hike to campus, it's apparent that a parking problem exists at K-State.

Several proposals, including the implementation of a city and University-funded bus system, have been suggested by the Manhattan Planning Department as possible solutions to the growing problem.

In an April 28 memorandum to the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board, City Planner Gary Stith and Henry Boaten, K-State graduate student in planning who works part-time for the planning department, outlined the reasons for parking problems in the campus area. They listed six proposals to alleviate the problems.

THE PARKING problem was brought to the planning department's attention by complaints from residents in the campus area who said their driveways are being used as parking lots. According to Stith and Boaten, the problem is the result of "transient and storage parking."

Transient parking refers to students who drive to school each day, but park their cars on side streets and then walk to campus. A study done in 1973 for K-State by Oblinger and Smith Corporation of Wichita, indicated 15 to 18 per cent of the cars parked around campus can be attributed to transient parking.

The report said the bulk of the parking problem is storage parking; a lack of parking on the part of apartment owners and landlords, fraternities, sororities and the University.

STITH AND Boaten believe the University should work with the city because K-State's lack of student parking is largely responsible for the parking problem.

"If the University would provide more student parking and would allow freshmen to park on campus, there would be much less parking problems in the surrounding areas," Boaten said.

"It's up to the University to lift the ban on freshmen parking on campus," Stith said. "This is something we cannot do anything about."

According to Security and Traffic Chief Paul Nelson, freshmen were banned from parking on campus solely to relieve a parking shortage.

"The Traffic and Parking Council decided years ago that there was a parking problem, and that freshmen should be restricted from parking on campus," Nelson said. There was talk at one time of restricting sophomores also, but after studying the problem and discussing it with other universities, the committee decided this was not necessary."

JANE STOCKARD, chairman of the Traffic and Parking Council, does not foresee an increase in parking areas for the campus. Any new buildings will be supplied with adequate parking, she said, but it would not be feasible to provide more parking for the student body as a whole.

"We have met with a representative from the city and have debated various possibilities to help alleviate the (parking) problem," Stockard said. "It is a complex problem, however, that will require the efforts of more than one group."

Along with the proposals to allow freshmen to park on campus and provide more student and faculty parking, the planning department suggests the University help introduce a bus system. This system would be aimed particularly at commuting students.

"The University and the city should look into a bussing system for students to eliminate the problem of transient parking," Boaten said. "Who would have to pay for this system, however, is still unanswered."

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE to help finance this project can be applied for through the Urban Mass Transit Authority, Boaten said.

In another proposal, Stith and Boaten suggested stronger enforcement of existing parking regulations.

One zoning ordinance requires two parking spaces for each apartment unit, but regulations such as this are hard to enforce.

"We have to rely on complaints to find where the violations are taking place," Stith said. "It's impossible to enforce every zoning violation. To do that, we would have to have a force the size of the Riley County Police Department."

Because it is difficult to enforce parking regulations, the planning department has suggested changing several regulations. These changes would increase parking in the University area and remove ambiguities in existing regulations.

ONE CHANGE would increase the parking requirements of all R-

A-credit-no credit would up grade inflation, Hoyt says

Adoption of an A-credit-no credit policy at K-State probably would increase grade inflation, according to Don Hoyt, director of educational research.

"It's obviously going to make grades look more inflated because

Louisville busing stirs controversy

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—Louisville, in the second year of a school busing plan that divided the community, is mired anew in controversy over a judge's ruling that first-graders will not be bused.

United States Dist. Judge James Gordon ruled late Tuesday that first-graders are exempt from his desegregation plan. He ruled after pleas from school officials who argued first-graders are emotionally unprepared to be bused.

The Kentucky NAACP on Wednesday criticized the ruling as politically motivated, and Tom Hogan, a lawyer for plaintiffs in the suit that led to the desegregation plan, said he would appeal the ruling.

Gordon, who two years ago ordered busing of more than 20,000 of the city's then-projected enrollment of 134,000 students, said most first-grade classes here are partially integrated now and statistics show the youngsters are "subject to a very high risk of failure."

He said busing would increase the risk of failure among the emotionally immature and "easily excitable" first-graders.

the only way you can go is up," Hoyt said.

A Student Senate resolution which would allow students taking classes credit-no credit to receive an A if they earned an A is before Faculty Senate.

Grade inflation denotes a trend toward increasing average grades received. The average grade earned in 1964 was 2.41 and by 1974 had increased to 2.85, according to a study conducted by Hoyt and an associate, Jeffrey Reed, graduate in psychology.

The report was based on questionnaires returned from 188 faculty members and 369 students.

It also summarizes opinions on the causes and effects of grade inflation.

A POLICY of A-credit-no credit would provide an unrealistic example of the real world, Hoyt said.

"How many times in real life will you have the opportunity to have everything to win and nothing to lose?" he asked.

Credit-no credit was begun to encourage students to explore areas in which they had no background, but it is currently used to protect students' grade averages, Hoyt said.

"With credit-no credit, we told students we would not give them a grade in a class," he said. "Now we are going to say we won't give you a grade in a class unless it is an A. I have nothing against the A, but if you have the A, then you need the B and you need the C and the D and the F."

"I feel the senate should reconsider the policy, not necessarily throw it out, but reexamine the reasons for it," Hoyt said. "If we want a policy that lets students slack off in one area to put more effort into other areas, then let's pass the policy."

TOPEKA—A land use specialist told an interim committee Wednesday that the land use amendment approved by Kansas voters in 1976 would not stop the conversion of farmland into housing projects and shopping centers.

Barry Flinchbaugh of Kansas State University said if Kansans voted for the proposal with an eye toward keeping farmland as farmland, they were laboring under a misconception. It won't happen, he said.

"I have seen no evidence of a roll back (penalty provision) in other states stiff enough to stop the sale of property on the rural-urban fringe for housing developments or shopping centers," Flinchbaugh told a special House-Senate interim study committee.

"You're trying to make this bill do something that only zoning will do. If people were led astray in voting on this proposal, that's a matter in the past," he said.

WASHINGTON—The Carter administration called the hospital industry "obese" Wednesday and blamed inefficiency for much of the rapid increase in hospital bills.

But at a congressional hearing on the administration's proposed legislation to slow the rise in hospital costs, a spokesman for the hospital industry attacked Carter's plan as "arbitrary rationing of medical advances."

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph A. Califano said the cost ceiling would not hurt patient care.

WASHINGTON—A proposed alternative to President Carter's energy program being prepared for Senate Republicans calls for removing federal price controls on natural gas and oil as a means to "return to free market pricing for energy," it was learned Wednesday.

The GOP proposal would require energy companies to reinvest any excess profits they realize from this deregulation into exploration for new energy sources and increased production—or face a "windfall profits" tax.

Generally, the proposal emphasizes removing price controls on domestic production as a way of encouraging exploration for new energy sources. At the same time, it espouses some of the same conservation measures proposed by the President, including tax breaks for home insulation and solar energy devices.

LONDON—Prime Minister James Callaghan's son-in-law, Peter Jay, was named Wednesday as the next British ambassador to the United States. The appointment drew criticism from both friends and foes of the ruling Labor government.

Foreign Secretary David Owen said Jay, 40, would replace Sir Peter Ramsbotham in July. Ramsbotham will become governor of Bermuda.

Owen said the choice was his, not Callaghan's, but there were cries of "nepotism" from some of the prime minister's own Labor party lawmakers. Some diplomatic sources said Jay is young for the job.

TOPEKA—As deadlines approached, Gov. Robert Bennett said Wednesday he had not yet decided what action he will take on an income tax bill and a school finance measure which he doesn't like.

The governor, questioned by reporters in his office, declined to say whether he would veto one or both the measures or permit them to become law.

Bennett renewed charges that both bills are too expensive, the income tax measure resulting in a $4 million more than the governor had recommended.

The problem with the income tax bill, which Bennett vetoed once this session, is that it is now tied with another tax measure which he badly wants.

Fall Collegian staff to do its best

Amid criticism or praise, one must move on. And the Collegian presses will roll as usual next semester.

After an eventful semester in which the Collegian has been both the criticizer and the criticized, it is time to prepare to make the necessary changes.

ONCE AGAIN, a big challenge exists. A staff of student journalists will have to try to strike a balance between fulfilling their own professional standards and dreams and giving other students what they want to and should read.

By nature of these two desires, a balance will never be reached. The role of the press, be it student or the community type, is such that to truly do its job, it must upset people at times. This semester the Collegian hasn't been afraid to do that. Neither will it be next semester.

Each semester, the Collegian editor tries to explain the role of the paper. And through the years, little has changed in that respect, for good journalism doesn't change.

Next fall, the Collegian reader may only notice the obvious changes in the paper. We plan to change a few physical characteristics and Arts and Entertainment will run twice a month instead of weekly, simply to provide more time to produce a quality page.

ASIDE FROM staff changes within the newsroom, there won't be any drastic differences in the paper as a product.

A good newspaper derives much of its strength from tradition, as well as it receives much of its vitality from its willingness to change.

But, a newspaper receives most of its effectiveness from its courage to be aggressive. And the Collegian will be courageous and aggressive next fall. Although it sounds soapy, if we didn't act in this manner, we wouldn't be living up to our journalistic duty.

So, this fall we will be ready to tackle any issue, unafraid of the criticism that might fall upon us. But above all else, we will be fair.

The Collegian will not be out to get anyone next semester. As it should be, our job will be to report and interpret the news, not make it.

A LARGE university like K-State needs a brave newspaper. For the Catch-22s of bureaucracy have the potential to overpower students. And students have the potential of overpowering themselves if they don't have an outlet to divert this potential.

The Collegian is this outlet.

Whether all will be quiet on the campus next semester remains to be seen. But one thing is for sure, whatever happens the Collegian will be there doing its best.

Consumers need protection

President Jimmy Carter's energy policy may hurt the American consumer in the pocketbook but he can make up for the loss if he can bring alive the proposed Consumer Protection Agency.

As consumers, you and I receive the poorest representation in Congress of any group. If you belong to a union, if you are a doctor, a lawyer or if you own all or part of a business, then you pay for professional lobbyists to look after your needs.

Even as a listener of the radio and a watcher of television there is a government agency that, in theory, is protecting you.

BUT, THE consumer can rely only on the "lone ranger," Ralph Nader for protection of defective products, etc.

Sure, you could argue there's the Better Business Bureau or the Chamber of Commerce or even the K-State Consumer Relations Board but these agencies usually deal only with individuals and only after the consumer has filed a complaint.

We need something to counteract the millions of dollars spent by lobbying groups such as the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce and the Business Roundtable, which are fighting right now to kill the CPA for good.

ONCE INTO the federal bureaucracy I fear the agency could, like so many of government-funded agencies, be controlled by the people it should be working against, namely the big businessmen.

If by chance Carter can turn his back on the big lobbies and form the CPA it wouldn't be all powerful. Its only operation would be regulation. It would also be working on a limited budget of only $15 million.

Even with no authority and a limited budget it would still act as an organized group protecting the interests of the consumer.

One argument against such an agency would be; why waste the money when the American economic system has a built-in protection against defective products? If the products are not good, then common sense says no one will buy it. But this doesn't work.

THE GASOLINE stations right here in Manhattan are a good example of businesses controlling prices.

It seems right before the students get back from their vacations the gas prices rise, sometimes as much as six cents. When the students leave, the prices, of course, go down. This has happened on a regular basis for quite some time.

I'm not saying the CPA would control prices but this shows how organized business can set prices at the mercy of the consumer.

We also need protection from products that work just like on television for the first few weeks then fall apart. And I'm sure that most consumers have wasted a good portion of their weekly pay check on a product only to find the manufacturer or dealer declared bankruptcy and the product you ordered can't be found.

THE CPA would also deal with automobiles which seem to start falling apart right after the 12,000 miles or one year warranty expires.

The small sum of $15 million would be well spent considering the benefits such a service could give to the helpless consumers.

K-State crew members comment on coverage

Editor,

We, the K-State Crew, wish to thank all the students, faculty and alumni who so faithfully supported us through the year. Our program would have suffered greatly without you.

WE ALSO wish to thank the Collegian for so faithfully following our every step. We know how dedicated you are to crew, making sure it gets equal billing with all other sports here at K-State.

We are especially grateful for the fine coverage of last fall's annual regatta and we're sure Nebraska appreciated getting their picture in the paper.

Sure wish we could have gotten the same, since we won all the races.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE the fine article about our men's sculler who did so well at the prestigious Head of the Charles last October. The rest of the team also did very well three weeks ago when it brought the conference championship to K-State. Thank you for letting everyone know.

For you who are interested in our activities:

- 1) We are the conference champions.
- 2) We made a strong showing in the Midwest Rowing Championships in Madison, Wis., placing all but one of our boats in the finals.
- 3) This weekend we will be in Wichita rowing against Wichita, Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Washburn.
- 4) Women's regionals in Minneapolis, Minn., men's nationals in Syracuse, N.Y. and women's nationals in Philadelphia are still yet to come.

AGAIN, thank you all for your support. We will continue to row our hardest for the remainder of the season.

Courts not for paid lessons

Editor,

On Monday I went out to play tennis at 6:30 p.m. On the court next to me was a person giving a tennis lesson to another person, complete with a basket of balls scattered all over their court and the two adjoining courts.

AT ABOUT 7 p.m. they quit and the person receiving the lesson wrote a check to the person giving the lesson. At this point I walked over and stated that I thought using University courts to give lessons for pay was illegal.

To this the person giving the lesson said the following (not exact words): I'm the tennis coach here and if I want to use them for my personal use it's my business. I know there's a rule posted about giving lessons for money, but I'm coach here and I'll do what I want. It's like Hartman's basketball camp.

Now, maybe I'm naive about how big-time university athletics works, but something doesn't seem right to me.

FIRST OF ALL I think the tennis coach is abusing the intent of having the courts reserved in the afternoons. I thought the courts were reserved for the tennis team to practice, not to give the coach a sure vacant court at 6:30 to keep from having clients wait.

Also, I thought there was a rule some place about using state property to support a private enterprise.

It hardly seems fair to me that either the state or the students should have to pay for the overhead for a tennis pro's operation.

Tentative complex site displeases professors

Editor,

As faculty members who use the Ahearn Field House recreational complex frequently over the noon hour, we are greatly disturbed by the tentative choice of the L.P. Washburn complex site for the new recreation building.

THE LARGE number of faculty-staff users at this time come primarily from the central campus area; most of us simply do not have time or sometimes even transportation, to travel to the proposed site.

If the building is indeed erected at the Washburn site, the number of noon-time users will drop drastically.

WE WOULD prefer scrapping the project altogether and keeping modest facilities in a usable location to putting excellent facilities at an isolated site.

Let's keep this campus designed for walking transportation.

Nation's swine flu vaccine may be stored for 10 years

ATLANTA (AP)—The nation's supply of swine flu vaccine is a valuable resource and it may be stockpiled for as long as 10 years, the national Center for Disease Control said Wednesday.

About 88 million doses, worth $40 million, have been collected by the states. Public health officials are trying to determine how to store the vaccine, said Dr. Donald Millar, director of the CDC's Bureau of State Services.

Final recommendations are expected in about a month.

"Such a vaccine usually is good for 18 months, but with proper refrigeration it can be kept for up to 10 years," Millar said in an interview.

The vaccine is part of the $135 million program voted by Congress during the Ford administration and called "the tragedy of the past year" by Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano.

MOST OF the vaccine is being held by the states and the question, Millar said, is: Who will control it in the end?

"We have suggested two alternatives," he said. "First, central stockpiling, federally managed. Second, each state would stockpile it under their management."

"There are advantages to the central stockpiling plan because it would be easier to care for. But if the states do it, it will be easier to distribute in the event of an emergency."

Millar said plans now are for the vaccine to be used only in case of another swine flu scare, which appears unlikely.

However, the military will use some of the stockpiled vaccine for its personnel next year, he said.

Millar said the swine flu vaccine, if maintained under refrigeration, would be effective against a new flu virus as long as it is closely related to A-Victoria or A-New Jersey swine flu.

"It might be that we could see a new pandemic strain in the next few years and it would be no good for that," he said. "But it is highly unlikely A-Victoria will cause additional major outbreaks. It's been around for two years."

A-VICTORIA was the predominant A-virus in the United States last winter. There also were outbreaks of B-virus, which attacks mostly children.

A strain called A-Texas appeared at an air base in Texas in January and later was identified in Colorado and Alaska. The CDC says this could be the predominant strain of any A-virus outbreak next winter.

The swine flu vaccination program was banned Dec. 16 when an apparent link between the vaccine and Guillain-Barre syndrome, a rare but occasionally fatal form of paralysis, was discovered. The program later was resumed but public response was poor.

The program was developed after an outbreak of the virus at Ft. Dix, N.J., last year, which infected about 500 recruits, killing one.

K-State engineers check out electric car possibilities

By JOLENE HOSS
Collegian Reporter

The College of Engineering is developing an electric automobile that will be able to recharge itself by a combined gas turbine and electric motor.

An electric car was donated to the college for research by Kansas Power and Light, said Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering. KP&L will help finance the research, Rathbone said.

THE CAR will be used for an honors project to research the idea of combining a gas turbine with an electric motor, he said.

The electric car is limited in its use because the batteries must be recharged. This makes long trips a problem for electric cars, Rathbone said.

"What we hope to do is to take the car and convert it to a combined turbine electric car," Rathbone said. "The basic philosophy of this is a car runs on gas, but what can be done is have a gas turbine which drives the electric portion of the automobile. If it is designed properly, the turbine can charge the batteries."

Ernest Mason, junior in electrical engineering, will work on the project next fall as part of the honors program.

The idea behind the project is to see if a conversion can be made to generate electricity from an energy source and thus cut down on the use of oil, Mason said.

THROUGH research Mason intends to design a way to recharge an electric automobile in transit. If a means for recharging the batteries while in transit can be found, the electric car could be better than the gasoline automobile.

"If we can use electricity we might be able to cut our dependency on foreign oil. Hopefully, with the system you would be getting equivalent mileage as with a regular automobile," he said.

"First we'll do a paper design and see if it will work out practically. If it is feasible we will implement the plans," Mason said.

"Right now we don't know if we are going to build it or not, we are just going to design it to see if it would be practical," he said.

Whether you plan to be here this summer, or just up on the weekend, don't forget us this summer!

Murdered farm family buried

Lincoln, Kan. (AP)—Schools and most businesses in this small north-central Kansas town were closed Wednesday afternoon for the funeral of three members of a slain farm family.

Townpeople filled the 400-plus seats in the Lincoln Methodist Church, and the overflow filled the aisles with people for the 35-minute service. Some people had to stand outside.

THEY HAD come to pay their last respects to Leonard Wiebke, 59, his wife, Esther, 59, and their son, Terry, 19.

The Wiebkes were shot at close range Saturday by a man who held them hostage at their farm house for more than four hours while officers surrounded the house. The man was identified as John Steward, 28, an ex-convict who had been sought for questioning in the shooting death last week of a St. Louis woman. Authorities said Steward shot and killed himself after killing the Wiebkes.

The Rev. Thomas Walsch conducted the funeral and told those attending not to be bitter about the senseless killings. He said the large turnout at the service was testimony to the community's sorrow.

THE THREE caskets were open at the rear of the church before the service but were closed before being moved to the front for the funeral.

The Wiebkes were buried in Lincoln Cemetery.

Among those who attended the funeral were Lincoln County Sheriff Don Panzer, who had tried to negotiate with Steward to free the Wiebkes Saturday, and Deputy Bob Bousfield, who had stopped Steward's car but let him go before he realized Steward was the man being sought.

High Blood Pressure The "Silent Killer"

Millions of people have high blood pressure and are unaware that they have the disease. It is a leading cause of disease and death in this country, and it will contribute to the death of 250,000 people this year. It can result in stroke, heart failure or kidney failure and is a risk factor in coronary artery disease. Wednesday and Thursday of this week there will be a free high blood pressure screening at Lafene Student Health Center. Students, Faculty and Staff may have their blood pressure checked either day.

Thursday May 12, from the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.

2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next Fall during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Norton KOs Bobick in first

NEW YORK (AP)—Ken Norton lashed out with four smashing right hands to the head and knocked out Duane Bobick in the first round of their scheduled 12-round heavyweight fight Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden.

The Garden crowd had hardly settled down for the action when Norton caught Bobick with a blasting right to the face that had him wobbling.

Norton jumped to the attack with both hands, but it was three more rights to the head that wrote the finish of Bobick's unbeaten pro career.

THE FOURTH right hand put him down in his own corner and although he beat the 10-count, referee Petey Della ruled he was unable to continue.

The time was 58 seconds of the round.

Norton had been introduced as "the man they call the uncrowned heavyweight champion" because of his disputed loss to Muhammad

Sports

Ali last September. He now definitely is in the best position for the next big-money fight with Ali.

Bobick, who bristles at the tag "Great White Hope," will not have to get upset about it any longer. Duane was only in the fight for about the first 30 seconds.

BOTH MEN came immediately to the center of the ring at the opening bell and exchanged jabs and tried rights as they looked for an opening.

Norton found it first and pounded home the right that derailed Bobick's dreams of a heavyweight title fight in the near future.

The final right was a round-house swing that caught Bobick on the side of the head and sent him face downward as the crowd of about 10,000 came to its feet. Their excitement was matched only by their disbelief.

BOBICK struggled to his feet saying, "I'm all right, I'm all right," but Della signaled the end and Norton shot into the air, both hands held aloft in a victory sign.

It was a sweet triumph for the 32-year-old Norton, who has had a history of losing the big ones. He first gained prominence by breaking Ali's jaw and winning a 12-round decision in 1973. But since then, he has lost twice to Ali and was knocked out in two rounds by George Foreman in a title fight in 1974.

A loss to Bobick probably would have finished him as a factor in the heavyweight division.

Bob Biron, Norton's manager, said in the ring before Norton left for the dressing room that Ali is next, probably in September in Rio de Janeiro. It is known that such a fight is in the works for a total of $14 million-plus under the promotion of Californian Ben Thompson.

A spokesman for Thompson said before the fight that both Bobick and Norton had signed contracts which call for the winner to fight Ali and that Ali's contract was being reconstructed.

OF THE Rio purse, $2.25 million would go to Norton, who earned $500,000 by beating Bobick.

For Norton, of Los Angeles, who weighed 222½, it was the 38th victory against four losses and it was his 31st knockout.

For the 26-year-old Bobick, who fights out of Philadelphia and who weighed 215½, it was the first loss after 38 victories.

Bobick, with tears in his eyes, told his mother and father in the dressing room, "I got hit in the Adam's apple (with Norton's first right) and couldn't get my breath."

Bobick was also cut over the left eye. The only thing that marked Norton was an ear-to-ear grin.

The action was carried nationally and locally by NBC-TV.

DUs snare Superball

Delta Upsilon won the all-University softball championship Wednesday by defeating Marlatt 6, 13-9.

Marlatt 6 scored three runs in the top of the first inning on Roger Hunt's home run to right field. But the DUs scored five in their half of the first.

Casey Scott led off with a single. Brad Bauer followed with a single but was injured crossing the bag. Scott stopped at second.

Lenny Tuozzolo singled Scott home and Bauer to third. Bauer was replaced by Brad Potter. Curt Kershner singled, scoring Potter and sending Tuozzolo to third. After Richard Sell flew out to leftfield, Richard Drake doubled, scoring Tuozzolo and Kershner. Drake scored the final run of the inning on John Teeter's triple.

Marlatt 6 added four runs in the third and scored their final two runs in the fifth. The DUs scored four runs in both the second and the third innings.

Hunt was the star of the game for Marlatt, going 3-3 with two singles to go along with his homer.

For the DUs, Scott, Tuozzolo and Kershner all had three hits. Drake, Potter and Ray Faucher had two hits.

Braves' owner takes over as temporary field manager

PITTSBURGH (AP)—With the Atlanta Braves mired in a 17-game losing streak, team owner Ted Turner took over as field manager last night after relieving Dave Bristol—at least temporarily.

The flamboyant Turner, who watched from the stands as his team lost a doubleheader here Tuesday night, was in the dugout when the Braves met the Pittsburgh Pirates last night.

Turner told reporters that Bristol had left the park and would spend 10 days on a scouting trip.

There was no immediate word here on whether the 33-year-old Bristol would definitely return as manager, although an announcement from the team's home office in Atlanta said he would return at the end of the 10-day period. Bristol was given a new two-year contract at the end of last season.

Turner, who made a fortune in the communications business, had no previous experience in baseball when he bought the club before the 1976 season.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn suspended Turner for one year earlier this spring for alleged violation of the free-agent rules prior to last fall's re-entry draft. Turner is appealing the suspension in federal court and has been permitted to resume his duties as president while the case is being decided.

Braves lose 17th in a row

PITTSBURGH (AP)—Major league batting leader Dave Parker broke a tie with a solo home run to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 2-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves, who lost their 17th game in a row in the managerial debut of team owner Ted Turner.

The Pirates 11th straight victory, behind John Candelaria, 4-0, came at the expense of knuckleballer Phil Niekro, who fell to 0-7.

Turner donned uniform number 27 and watched the game from the dugout.

The Braves' losing streak is the longest in the major leagues since Montreal lost 20 in a row in 1969. The Philadelphia Phillies lost 23 in a row in 1961, the longest losing streak in this century.

The Men of Sigma Chi Fraternity would like to thank the Little Sigma Organization of the 1976-77 School Year. We appreciate your help and hope to see you next year.

The angler's worst enemy

There they were, hovering menacingly over the pond. Their beady little eyes were watching me intently. I knew from past experiences these beasts were preparing to attack.

I started walking back, slowly, so as not to provoke them. They wanted my blood but I was determined they would not have it.

Then it happened, they started moving towards me. My hands were cold from the stark fear of what I knew might happen.

I PANICKED and ran wildly through the underbrush but it was hopeless. They were too fast.

I grabbed a three-inch thick tree limb, ripped it from the trunk of a tree and began flaying it wildly through the underbrush in an attempt to scare them off.

I didn't have a chance. These sworn enemies of all anglers attacked and rammed their beaks into me and started ravenously sucking my blood.

MOSQUITOES CAN ruin your angling trip and make you look like you have the measles. The mosquito uses the blood it sucks from you in its reproduction process.

Only female mosquitoes suck blood, so if you see a bunch of mosquitoes and they are all males, you don't have to worry.

There are many ways to prevent the ferocious mosquito from attacking. Since they are attracted by compounds in sweat, don't sweat. This is difficult to do, so other methods are in order.

Another method is to stay in the house all day and night. Unless you have a house boat, you aren't going to get much angling done.

ONE KIND of mosquito prevention often used by African tribes, and myself, works well. First you get a bucket full of water.

Next you find some yellow clay, throw the water on it, then take off your shoes and socks and tramp around in the muddy mess to mix it.

Take the clay mud in your hands and smear it on your skin. The dried mud on your skin prevents mosquitoes from biting and also is good if you want to scare people or go to a masquerade party.

Commercial mosquito repellant is one traditional way of preventing mosquitoes from attacking you. Vinegar on the skin also repels mosquitoes but I wouldn't recommend it if you have a girlfriend or boyfriend.

Mosquito netting will keep the mosquitoes out. Anglers do not usually use mosquito netting while fishing because it is hard to handle. It's main use is for stretching over your hammock in the back yard while you are drinking beer and watching the Royals on TV.

Preventing mosquitoes from attacking will enable you to have a better time while you are angling. Try to beat the mosquitoes and have a happy summer angling.

Look out, Royals; Rangers are in town

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Guess who's throwing out the first pitch Friday night at the game between Kansas City Royals and the Texas Rangers, the heavyweight brawling champions of professional baseball—Joe Louis, former heavyweight boxing champion of the world.

Even as the Royals went through abbreviated workout Wednesday morning, American League President Lee MacPhail was announcing that 10 men had been fined for their part in the 20-minute brawl that erupted last Saturday between the two teams.

The Royals won the game, but the Rangers won the fight. Third baseman George Brett, the Royals' most valuable player, is sidelined with a hyperextended elbow. And designated hitter Hal McRae said he has "bumps on my head and I feel sore all over."

MacPhail said Tuesday that both clubs, "plus management personnel, have been warned that violence... will not be tolerated and will lead to fines and suspensions." Tonight the teams open up what is sure to be a nervous four-game series.

Twice they have met this season, and twice there has been violence and fines.

In their first encounter, Royals' catcher Darryl Porter was hit by a pitch from Bert Blyleven. This triggered a tense confrontation as both benches streamed onto the field, but order was restored quickly.

Blyleven, who said he deliberately hit Porter in retaliation for the Royals' throwing at his teammates, was fined $500 and suspended for three days.

Then last week after Porter and Ranger second baseman Bump Wills collided on a run-down, the teams erupted into one of the most prolonged fights baseball has seen in years.

City may get new retirement center

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

A $2.5 million retirement center will probably be built in southwest Manhattan if a joint annexation and rezoning application is approved by the city.

Kare-Free Inc., financier of the project, probably will file application by May 18 for construction of the five floor, 50,000 square foot College Hill Active Retirement Center, said John Conderman, an attorney representing the firm in the request.

He said construction on the 77-room center could begin by August if the application is approved. Completion of the project is scheduled for a year later, said the company's president Don Schmidt.

The application must be approved first by the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board and eventually by the Manhattan City Commission.

THE CENTER would be built on a 10-acre tract owned by the firm on Stagg Hill Road. The land is partially within Manhattan city limits, with about three acres outside the city.

Land within the city would have to be rezoned from residential to a planned development district and the remaining land would have to be annexed into the city for construction to be permitted.

The center would be the first such facility for the elderly in Manhattan, and would provide services and activities not found in nursing homes. Activities would include gardening, arts and crafts and chartered domestic and foreign travel tours for residents.

Residents in the center would live in the single and double bedroom, appliance-furnished apartments, and would be connected to a 24-hour emergency call system for medical assistance.

ACCORDING TO Schmidt, such an arrangement would be cheaper for the elderly than a nursing home, because of lower building and overhead costs involved in a retirement center.

"You have to pay for an expensive building (for a nursing home), because of stringent (state and federal safety) requirements," Schmidt said. "So I'd say you can build a retirement center and people can live there at two-thirds the cost of a nursing center."

Another low cost measure is the smaller nursing and administrative staff required at the center. Schmidt said 25 or 30 staff members would work at the center, compared to about 80 employed at College Hill Nursing Home, which has almost one-half the number of residents the center would have.

Schmidt said since the center isn't a health facility it isn't required under federal law to provide 24-hour nursing.

Residents would be entitled to medicare benefits in physical and speech therapy not provided by the center at the College Hill Nursing Home, also owned by Kare-Free Inc.

NITA HUNT, College Hill

Nursing Home administrator, said the center would stress rehabilitation of physically or mentally handicapped old persons.

"The more active a senior citizen is, the healthier they'll be," Hunt said. "Not many nursing homes have budgets for many activities."

Schmidt said the center's residents would be encouraged to function independently, and would be free to come and go at will.

"It's mostly doing things for themselves so they can continue to be active in the community," he said. "It's kind of a new direction."

Schmidt said the center's purpose is "to teach these people that when you retire you don't quit."

Kare-Free Inc. was turned down by the city four years ago on a rezoning application for construction of a similar retirement center on Kimball Road. Schmidt said the unavailability of water and sewer services there prompted the rejection.

This application, he said, should be approved since water and sewer services are provided on the land planned for development. "I hope it will fly, and it just looks good at this point," he said.

Judge says Concorde can land; decision upsets New Yorkers

NEW YORK (AP)—In a ruling that brought joy in Paris and outrage in Queens, a federal judge declared Wednesday that New York's airports have no right to bar the supersonic Concorde jetliner.

Judge Milton Pollack in his decision said the plane was entitled to a 16-month test at Kennedy Airport, just as it is having in Washington. The latter test was ordered by the federal government.

Pollack ruled that the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey which operates metropolitan airports, could not overrule federal policy mandating Concorde test runs. But he stopped short of formally granting the faster-than-sound aircraft access to Kennedy.

THE PORT Authority said Pollack's decision would be appealed. However, a spokesman pointed out that the next legal move under the judge's decision is actually up to British Airways and Air France.

They were given 10 days to submit a request for an injunction or other measure to implement the decision. The appeal would follow action by the two airlines which fly the Concorde.

City helps K-State improve parking

3 zoning districts—which occupy a large portion of the problem area—from two to two and one-half parking spaces per living unit. However, this would affect areas other than where the problem is and would prevent only the present problem from becoming worse.

Another change would require one parking space for each bedroom in a living unit, or for each 250 square feet of living space in a multi-family dwelling.

This would alleviate the problem of several people renting a large apartment for which only two parking spaces are provided, Boaten said. Because of the ambiguity of the word "bedroom," there's an advantage in using floor area over number of bedrooms in determining needed parking, he said.

A final alternative proposed by the planning department would establish a University parking district, with a higher number of parking spaces per unit for the district.

"I feel it would be quite naive to arbitrarily request higher parking allowances in these areas without thorough analysis," Stith said.

Israeli helicopter crashes; wreck kills 54 servicemen

TEL AVIV (AP)—An Israeli military helicopter crashed and exploded in the occupied West Bank, killing all 54 servicemen aboard in the nation's worst air force disaster, officials announced Wednesday.

The tragedy plunged the nation into mourning and prompted politicians to suspend campaigning for the May 17 election.

THE STATE radio said 10 crewmen and 44 passengers were killed in the crash that occurred during maneuvers Tuesday.

Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur, Israeli chief of staff, told newsmen the aircraft carried paratroopers and their officers. He said that while the cause had not been pinpointed, an inquiry committee had ruled out the possibility of foul play, such as an attack by Palestinian guerrillas.

A paratrooper told the Israeli armed forces radio he saw the helicopter make a half-turn and then disappear from sight.

"I heard an explosion followed by several more smaller explosions," he said.

Announcement of the crash was delayed for 18 hours to notify the soldiers' families.

Entertainment portions of a Jerusalem celebration of the 10th anniversary of the 1967 war were canceled, and the Israeli cabinet met on receiving the news.

FUNERALS for the 54 victims were planned for Thursday. A parliamentary session scheduled for the same day was canceled.

The previous worst air force disaster in Israel's history occurred in November 1975 when 20 soldiers were killed in the crash of a Hercules transport plane into mountains in the Sinai Desert.

Tuesday's accident occurred five miles west of the Jordan River, Gur said. He said the helicopter plunged to the ground after climbing a few hundred feet. Wreckage was reportedly spread over a 200-yard radius.

After dragging along the ground for several dozen feet, the helicopter exploded, Gur said.

GUR SAID the helicopter was on maneuvers that included combat aircraft, tanks, engineering corps units and artillery.

The pilot, a reserve soldier on routine callup, was a veteran with more than 1,100 hours of experience in the Sikorsky CH53, which became known as the "Jolly Green Giant" in the Vietnam war.

The pilot ordered four men off the helicopter before take off to avoid overloading, Gur said. The aircraft's maximum load is 60 men or 5½ tons.

Moore females wake to rescue from cents

Most of Moore Hall's female residents woke up to the sound of pounding hammers early Wednesday morning.

They were being rescued from locked doors caused by pennies wedged between the doors and adjoining walls.

More than 150 of the dorm's residents, including all but two floor staff assistants and the Hall director, were locked in their rooms for about 15 minutes by an unknown group of pranksters. Hall Director Pat Magerkurth estimated that $17 worth of pennies were used in the prank.

The pennies were glued together in packets of five and wedged to seal the doors. Magerkurth said her apartment's back door was sealed shut with tied rope.

SHE SAID the pennies damaged her front door's closing mechanism and the door latches weren't functioning right.

She also said there probably were some doors in other rooms damaged although it was too early to estimate how many.

Reactions were mixed from the imprisoned residents.

One coed said she thought the incident was funny, while others expressed outrage. One coed said she was angry because she was awakened out of a short sleep.

Magerkurth said the prank was dangerous because the locked doors could jeopardize lives if a fire broke out or if some student experienced a medical emergency.

"It doesn't make any sense to take these kinds of risks," Magerkurth said.

Scholarship fund for econ professor

A scholarship has been established in remembrance of John Delehanty, K-State professor of economics who died in April.

An annual scholarship was chosen as a fitting memorial for Delehanty's dedication to undergraduate teaching, intellectual integrity and sense of social justice, according to members of the scholarship committee.

Scholarship recipients will be selected from all junior and senior students who have 15 or more credit hours in economics.

Contributions to the Delehanty Memorial Fund may be made to the K-State Endowment Association.

There may be GOLD in your closet.

For years, objects of great value have been accumulating in the closets, drawers, basements and bookshelves of Manhattan. Ignored, despised, and long unused, these items could be worth tens of thousands, if only their owners were alert enough to bring them to market!

We're talking about books. Virtually every student has lots of 'em. Of course, almost everybody brings some of their books to the Union to sell every semester. But, a good many more never get to us, because they are forgotten or mis-laid.

So, before you make your trip up to the Union to sell your books, go on a treasure hunt. Check all those nooks and crannies, pile up your discoveries, and cash in. Even books which were discontinued last year could be on the list again. You'll never know until you try.

The Union will be paying those unrivaled high prices again starting May 13th (that's this Friday) and continuing through final week.

Chain letters violate lottery statutes

By DAN WILLIAMS
SGA Editor

A chain letter-type operation currently circulating in Manhattan and other parts of Kansas, and under federal investigation for mail fraud violations, also violates Kansas lottery statutes, a Kansas Consumer Protection Division spokesman said Wednesday.

The chain, which promises up to $50,000 to participants, violates Kansas laws against operations involving an initial payment, an element of chance and the possibility of a prize, in this case $25 savings bonds, said Don Low, a lawyer with the Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division in Topeka.

LOW SAID the chain circulated in Manhattan last year in April, when he was K-State's student attorney, and said the operation is widespread across Kansas.

Since the operation has circulated so long, it should peter out soon, Low said.

"I think it's nearing the end of the pyramid and I don't think there are enough people who are willing or able to buy the thing," he said.

Breshnev viewed as firm by Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP)—Richard Nixon, in his second television interview, portrays Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev as a firm and sophisticated adversary as the two superpowers pursued a mutual policy of detente.

Nixon, sources said, credits Brezhnev with being less volatile and having a firmer grasp than his predecessor, the late Nikita Khrushchev, who broke up the 1960 summit meeting in Paris with a denunciation of American spy-plane reconnaissance of the Soviet Union.

David Frost's second interview show with Nixon was scheduled for broadcast Thursday at 7:30 p.m. EDT over a makeshift network of 155 stations. The show is devoted to foreign policy.

Nixon found Khrushchev to be impulsive—in contrast to Brezhnev—particularly in his dealings with the late President Dwight Eisenhower. It was at the abortive summit that Khrushchev submarined Eisenhower's plan to have Nixon take over for him, saying that would be "to leave the cabbage to the care of the goat."

Nixon offers his appraisal of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, as well as the two Soviet leaders, and emphasizes that he himself originated the attempted reconciliation with Communist China.

The chain consists of a list of 10 names which must be purchased for $37.50, a $25 savings bond and an instruction sheet. The buyer mails the attached savings bond to the person to whom it is made out, then buys two $25 bonds, at $18.75, and endorses these with the name at the top of the 10-name list.

The buyer then makes up two new lists and instruction sheets with the two new bonds attached and the buyer's name at the bottom of the list. These he sells for $37.50 each to complete the chain.

A United States Postal Service investigator in Topeka Tuesday said mailing the attached savings bond as part of the chain constituted federal mail fraud. He also said the operation has been under investigation in Kansas about a month.

Another Topeka postal investigator, W.R. Willige, when contacted Wednesday, said the chain started two years ago in the midwestern United States and turned up in Kansas City about a year ago.

WILLIGE SAID he was investigating about 12 cases involving the chain but had not arrested anyone in connection with it. He added he was considering prosecution to try to slow down the chain.

A conviction would mean a sentence of up to five years in a federal penitentiary, a fine of up to $1,000 or both.

"I was thinking about prosecution," he said. "The problem is, if people are going to make money out of it, nobody will report it. Now, we're just trying to discourage people from getting into it."

Currently, the chain is circulating in at least one K-State fraternity, Sigma Nu. The fraternity's president, Mark Eagleton, said he was not involved, but that he was leaving participation in the operation up to the individual residents.

One Sigma Nu resident, who would not identify himself, said about 25 Sigma Nu residents were involved in the chain, and said he was on three 10-name lists.

"I'm positive it's legal," he said. "In order for it to be illegal, the list and or the instructions must be sent through the mail."

He said the fraternity has contacted four attorneys who said the chain was legal.

The Sigma Nu resident also said he had received one $25 savings bond so far and had sold his two lists within an hour of buying the initial list.

K-State has largest Campus scout group

They no longer wear little brown outfits, but they still sell cookies. K-State's 40-member Campus Girl Scout group is the largest campus scout group in the nation.

"We participate in the normal scout-type activities, such as camp-outs, cook-outs and selling cookies," said Robie Watson, former president of the campus group, who has been a girl scout for 15 years.

Previously, a girl out of senior scouts could not look forward to further activities, except as a camp counselor during the summer. But now campus groups are being nationally recognized and are officially called Campus Scouts instead of "other" scouts, Watson said.

SOME MEMBERS were never girl scouts before college but joined because of the activities and opportunity to work with young people, she said.

The scouts sponsor various activities for younger scouts and brownies, including the Brownie Junior Play Day and the camping weekend for Senior Scouts graduating from high school, and are often asked to teach leadership skills to the younger groups.

"Our group is a student organization, but some groups start as service clubs and others start as sororities," Watson said.

"The goal of girl scouts is to provide a way for girls to grow up and learn social skills," she said. "The skills include getting along with people and being confident in the home as a cook. We also stress outdoor activities."

As a final fling this semester, the scouts have planned a camping-canoes trip to Lake Elbo this weekend.

"Our group is a service organization, which serves as resource people for troops, and an interest organization for the activities we plan," Watson said.

K-State will sponsor the Regional V Campus Girl Scout Conference next year.

Kathy Treadway, assistant professor in curriculum and instruction, is the group's adviser.

Central American official found dead

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP)—Foreign Minister Mauricio Borgeonovo, kidnaped three weeks ago, was found shot to death and a leftist group said Wednesday he was "executed" in a "revolutionary war to establish socialism."

Borgeonovo's body, with three .22-caliber bullet holes in the head, was discovered Tuesday night along a road about 10 miles southwest of this capital city.

HIS FAMILY was notified by President Arturo Armando Molina, who visited in person to offer condolences, a family spokesman said.

Molina, whose military regime has been under fire in connection with alleged human rights violations, had refused to deal with the kidnapers. They had demanded the release of 37 political prisoners for Borgeonovo's freedom.

The abduction drew worldwide attention to this Central American country, with both Pope Paul VI and U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim appealing for Borgeonovo's safe return.

Molina, an army colonel, met with military advisers Wednesday. Close aides said Molina had told the security chiefs: "Any measure we take, strong as it may seem, will be light compared to what they have done. We... will get them even if we have to search house by house."

Borgeonovo, foreign minister for five years, was a member of one of Salvador's wealthiest families.

BORGEONOVO was kidnaped April 19 by members of the Farabundo Marti Popular Liberation Front.

In a statement distributed to newspapers, the front said, "The operation aimed to achieve the freedom of 37 political prisoners in the claws of the Molina tyranny and unmask its crimes internationally."

Students counsel soldiers on money

By KIM MOORE
Collegian Reporter

Students in K-State's Department of Family Economics are gaining practical experience for a career and helping military personnel as well through their financial counseling program.

The department, in conjunction with the financial counseling clinic of the Army Community Services (ACS) at Ft. Riley, began the program in 1970 for military personnel and their dependents, according to Albie Rasmussen, assistant professor of family economics and initiator and director of the program.

"It has received national recognition as an outreach of the University," Rasmussen said. "Very few universities even have a financial counseling practicum, and I know of no other that reaches into the military segment of the population."

IN THE January 1977 issue of the "Journal of Home Economics," Rasmussen described the three types of counseling at ACS, remedial, preventive and productive.

Remedial counseling is when a client is referred to the clinic by the military post's Judge Advocate General or the company commander. This is usually for financial problems caused by over-indebtedness for a car and its maintenance, expensive consolidation loans or high utility or telephone bills.

Few seek preventive counseling. A brochure designed by two of the student financial counselors, "Managing Your Money," was distributed by post officials. Counselors also offer consumer education and family finance presentations.

PRODUCTIVE counseling is sought by those wanting information about selecting and purchasing complex financial services such as insurance and investments, Rasmussen said.

"Every case is different," Rasmussen said. "The first thing is to assess the situation, define the problem or make a referral to an agency. It's not simply a budgeting plan, although a budget is sometimes used as a means to working out a suggestion."

STUDENTS STAFF the clinic, under the direction of Rasmussen and ACS social workers and receive variable college credit for their work.

The counselors use classroom knowledge and practical experiences to deal with clients. The students are required to take a core of 18 credit hours in family and consumer oriented economics, as well as 16 additional credit hours in professional electives such as consumer law, consumer relations, and problems of the elderly. They also take supportive courses in the social sciences, education, business and counseling, Rasmussen said.

"As of this summer, we will be accepting civilian clients at the Family Resource Center at 611 Poyntz," she said. "The reason I'm anxious to develop this program is because civilians often times feel threatened by the University atmosphere. They would prefer to go to the resource center to be counseled."

The family economics department does some student counseling, averaging one case per week, she said.

K.C. teachers meet with school board

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Kansas City teachers and school board representatives held their first contract talks in six weeks Wednesday.

As negotiators met, Norman Hudson, president of the Kansas City Federation of Teachers, said he expects the union will give its endorsement to sales tax renewal which will go before voters Tuesday.

The proposal calls for a three-year renewal of a half cent city sales tax which goes for education.

Hudson and Basil North, school board negotiator, both said they hoped talks could be concluded in two weeks. A seven-week strike by the district's teachers ended Sunday but most of the district's 51,000 students resumed classes before the strike ended.

Issues in the dispute include wages, class sizes and school supplies and equipment. There are some 2,000 teachers and other professionals in the system.

One twin may go to foster parents

WICHITA (AP)—Two state social workers recommended Wednesday that Anna Marie Cates, one of the Siamese twins born here in November 1975, be placed with a Wichita couple for possible long-term foster care.

They also testified in Sedgwick County District Court that they believed if Anna Marie's sister, Millie Lula, is turned over to authorities, she might be placed in the same home.

Judge Michael Corrigan was to interview the couple whom the social workers said could give Anna Marie a good home.

Both twins were ordered placed in state custody last year after a petition was filed in juvenile court alleging they were dependent and neglected because their mother, Ruth Montano, had left Wichita without arranging for their care.

The twins were surgically separated shortly after their birth.

Their father, Willie Cates, took Millie Lula from her hospital bed after the girls were ordered into state custody and has refused to reveal her whereabouts.

Cates, serving a prison sentence for his conviction last fall of second-degree murder, attended the court session.

Cancer worker denounces Laetrile

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Cancer patients who are convinced that the controversial drug Laetrile can help them may die unnecessarily, says Helene Brown, executive director of Community Cancer Control in Los Angeles.

"Patients are going to think that Laetrile is good and we're going to have a lot of deaths" if state legislatures legalize the drug, Brown told a national conference on cancer nursing Tuesday.

"Laetrile is no more effective than chicken soup in treating cancer," she said of the drug which is a compound derived from apricot seeds.

Brown said she had personally investigated cases of many users of Laetrile in California, one of 17 states considering legislation to permit the use of the drug. Alaska and Indiana have passed such laws.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: If a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Acker OKs new complex site

By JANE HIGGINS
and MARK TINDLE
Collegian Reporters

The proposed student recreation complex located in the L.P. Washburn complex area has been endorsed by K-State President Duane Acker and placed on the Kansas Board of Regent's May 20 agenda for approval.

The board approved construction of the complex last year at a location in the Memorial Stadium vicinity. K-State's Long Range Planning Committee, however, changed the site to the L.P. Washburn complex area north of campus Monday.

"It is important to go back to the Regents with this modification (of the site plan)," Acker said. "I would expect them to simply recognize the need for this change."

THE SITE was changed to the Washburn area because of lower building and utility costs and because of displaced classroom space at the Memorial Stadium sites.

"Our planning committee put fairly high priority on attachment of the rec complex to the natatorium," said Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs and chairman of a project planning committee which earlier had recommended a West Stadium site for the complex.

"We also put high priority on the idea not to displace any classroom space," Peters said. "When we could not find alternate space for the art department (now in West Stadium), and with utility problems and undergraduate problems, the Washburn site held greater prospects."

"The architects feel they have more freedom in developing a flexible, workable structure at the Washburn site than they may have had at a more restricted site," he said.

Student Body President Terry Matlack said he had favored the West Stadium site but now believes the L.P. Washburn site is the best choice.

"Yes, I favored a Memorial Stadium site, but after comparing all the possibilities there, I found less disadvantages with the north (Washburn) site," he said. "With the north site we will have all our recreational services there, unlimited parking and room for further expansion."

"I favored the West Stadium site because I felt it would be more accessible to students and it would be connected with the natatorium," Matlack said.

ONE OF THE reasons Matlack now favors the Washburn site is because it would not take up classroom space.

"Before we could consider the west site for the complex, we needed a promise from the University that we had alternate space for the art department," he said. "Any trade-off for space at the Memorial site would have been a trade-off of academic space for recreation space."

"Our priorities here should be on academics, their decision for the Washburn site is at least a trade-off of recreation space for recreation space," he said.

All the proposed Memorial Stadium sites located at Memorial Stadium would have destroyed classroom space used by the art department, the speech department, or the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation (H.P.E.R.), according to Matlack.

"The reason I now favor the north site is that there the student will get more for his money and in the long run it will be the best location for rec services," Matlack said.

STUDENT and faculty using the outdoor facilities at the L.P. Washburn complex could easily move into the indoor facilities of the recreation complex, Peters said.

From the standpoint of operation and personnel, Raydon Robel, director of recreational services, said he favored combining indoor and outdoor facilities at the Washburn site.

According to the complex plan, the building would house six basketball courts also to be used for multi-purpose space; 16 handball and racquetball courts; larger weight and exercise areas; a combination dance and hard surface floor for dancing, karate or fencing; a mat area for judo and wrestling; locker and shower areas; a check-out center; office space for rec services and possibly a lounge and vending area, Robel said.

He said the added courts will ease the winter intramural basketball conflict. Intramural games at the new complex can start around 4 p.m., and the Ahearn Field House courts could still be used in the evenings, he said.

Four-wall indoor handball and racquetball will be added to the intramural schedule, he said.

"Even though we're seeing participation go up each year (in recreational sorts)," Robel said, "with more emphasis on fitness and physical education in elementary and secondary schools, people are going to be spending more time in physical recreational activities, and they will make more use of a recreation facility."

STUDENTS ACCEPTED the site change to the Washburn area with mixed emotions.

"Of course, we would like to have it (the recreation complex) in the old stadium area because it is only a block from our house," said Kent Martens, president of Lambda Chi Alpha. "But it probably will be more convenient for the entire University out at the Washburn areas."

Due to a shortage of paper, drunken staffers, a rocket attack on our printing presses and final week, the Collegian will cease publication today for the spring semester.

Publication will resume June 6 during summer school and August 29 for the fall semester.

The Collegian wishes everyone a good finals week and a happy and safe summer.

For $345, you too can enroll at K-State

By ANN ARTERBURN
Collegian Reporter
Inflation has hit K-State enrollment fees.

Fall tuition for full-time residents will increase $50 and $150 for non-residents.

The increases, approved last summer by the Kansas Board of Regents, are in response to a standing recommendation by the Legislative Budget Committee that students pay 25 per cent of total general-use funds for educational programs and physical plant costs. Several other fees also will increase.

STUDENT health fees will increase from $32 to $37. Student recreation building fees will double from $6 to $12 and student activities fees will increase from $19.25 to $24.25.

These increases bring the fall totals to $345 for residents and $840 for non-residents. Veterinary medicine resident students will pay $395 and non-residents, $915.

Students enrolled in six or less hours also will pay increased fees.

Residents will pay $17 per credit hour instead of $14 and non-residents will pay $50 instead of $40. Their student recreational building fees also double from $3 to $6 and activity fees will increase $6, to $11.50.

Don Foster, director of student records, also announced an increase in late fees. The minimum late registration fee will be $10. After the 10th day of classes the fee will increase to $25.

This year late fees were $2.50 for the first week and $5 after. Those figures were established in the 1930s and have never changed, Foster said.

There are two reasons for the late fee increase, he said.

"One is to encourage students to enroll on time and the other is to at least partially defray the extra cost involved in enrolling someone in a special way," Foster said.

THE COST to K-State is "considerably greater" to enroll someone late because of the special processing, he said.

The cost of living in residence halls is also going up. A $40 increase per student will mean students in double rooms will pay $600 per semester. Double rooms occupied as a single will be $740 and small single rooms will be $655 per semester.

With the tuition and housing increases, resident students who live in dorms will pay $106 per semester more than this year and non-residents, also living in dorms, will pay $206 more.

Pennsylvania's head man ordered to pay back funds

WASHINGTON (AP)—Pennsylvania Gov. Milton Shapp was ordered Thursday to pay back almost $300,000 in federal funds he had been given for his brief campaign last year for the Democratic presidential nomination.

The Federal Election Commission ordered the repayment. Its investigators found that Shapp's supporters had made incorrect claims about raising the amounts of money from the number of donors required by the election law for a candidate to qualify for matching federal funds.

Shapp, declining to leave his Harrisburg, Pa., office in the state capitol building, had no comment on the commission's ruling.

HOWEVER, his lawyer, Gregory Harvey, said there was no evidence that Shapp was personally aware of the illegal activities. Harvey said Shapp would fight the repayment order.

FEC Counsel William Oldaker said the irregularities were uncovered during audits of all 15 candidates who got matching federal campaign funds last year. He said that so far no other irregularities have been discovered.

The six-member commission voted 5-0 to order Shapp to make repayment, with one member abstaining.

Meanwhile, the commission was pursuing an investigation that could result in prosecutions for others involved in fund-raising for Shapp.

The commission disclosed that it had reached conciliation agreements with 16 people in the case, mostly involving nominal fines and agreements to testify in the continuing probe.

In voting for the repayment order, Commissioner Thomas Harris said: "I am puzzled and distressed with the rather casual and cavalier fashion by which many of these people have entered into this scheme. I find it shocking."

Opinions

Criticism central to working press

It's not easy to listen to someone who insists on telling you what is wrong with you.

That's one of the things journalists, and newspapers, are paid to do—tell their readers what is wrong with them, their government, their way of thinking about certain things, perhaps even the way they brush their teeth.

The idea is that if you tell someone what is wrong with them, they can correct the problem.

No one could accuse the Collegian of being complacent this semester. This newspaper has kept itself busy—besides the color of Special Effects, SNAFU, Creative Cooking, Peanuts and coverage of popular sporting events, it did something some did not like—it reported bad news as well as good, editorially criticized rather than patted on the back.

WE CRITICIZED student body president candidates for campaigning like homecoming queen candidates—all smiles and no firm stands on the issues. We did so because a student body president needs to be aggressive once in a while. He needs to be someone who refuses to "work together" when students' rights are encroached upon by Boards of Regents, University presidents, administrators, faculty senators and others.

We criticized student senate for using a secret ballot, thus violating the state statute on open meetings. We did so not only because it is the law but because students have a right to know the reasons behind anything their government does.

WE DIDN'T convince student senate of that and so this month asked the state attorney general for an opinion. We hope he will settle the issue.

Most controversial of all, we reported there was a problem in the K-State Athletic Residence Hall—a situation in which many girls have been hurt. The results of our story saddened us, because we were accused of blowing a story out of proportion, of knifing the athletic programs in the back.

Perhaps that was our fault. Maybe we could have written the story clearer, shorter, not used the word "uproar" to describe the K-State reaction to the alleged gang rape.

All the criticism only served to divert the attention from the problem however. Athletes and women both sat in our office, in Aggieville, in the Union, in sororities and dorms and told us others had been hurt.

FEW OF them knew each other but all told a similar story. It was a story of how a University housed high-spirited athletes under one roof, of how many women "infatuated with the jock image" conditioned athletes to a rather free and easy social lifestyle. The result, these students told us, was that sometimes, some (not all, or even a majority, but SOME) athletes went "overboard" and hurt people.

There were too many of these sources saying the same thing not to believe them. If you choose to believe that several dozen students on this campus were not telling us the truth, that's your business. Our business is to point out problems, not to solve them.

Have a good summer and keep your heads out of the sand.

Friday dynasty terminates

"Scott?"
"Huh?"
"It's over."
"But the police don't even suspect me yet."
"Four years, Scott. Remember?"
"Yeah, but Nixon's gone now."
"Not MORE years, Scott. Years past. The end of a dynasty. The end of the Friday Column."
"The end? Or maybe just a beginning. What is an 'end'? Some cub columnist is ready, willing and able to fill our sandals and is probably waiting in the wings at this very moment."

"PRETTY big sandals, Scott. One giant step for any cub, one giant step for mankind."

"Well, whatever. (Notice the non-sentence.) We've killed off four years of oblivion and, thanks to medical technology, have many more empty years left to look forward to."

"To which we look forward. Prepositions, Scott. Watch your prepositions."

"OK, OK. Let's forget heavy pseudo-philosophical ramblings and get down to the nitty-gritty of this humorous (big laugh) column. I'm into mutants today, Steve. Big ones, little ones, fat and fast-talking ones. Hit me with a mutant."

(Steve, at this point in the conversation, is left speechless. The column resumes with further zany madcap dialogue.)

"STEVE, you can call my parents ALL those awful things, but I still want to talk about mutants. Mutant jokes, mutant cars or mutant bathroom towels. It makes no difference."

"Ah, but differences are in the eye of the beholder, Scott, be he mutant or not. Besides, mutants are figments of your imagination. Mutants are dead, Scott. DEAD!"

"Boy! Is that a load off MY mind! Dead mutants. Wow! Who's gonna clean them up?"

"Physical Plant, Scott. They have a mutant vacuum cleaner."

"Oh?"

"Oh."

"Y'know, there's one thing I've learned here at K-State, Steve."

"What's that, Scott?"

"Never cross a person who sells Tupperware."

"Yeah, well, you know what they say."

"Boy?"

"Boy."

"I WONDER if the readers will get it?"

"I doubt it. The whimps."

"Oh w."

"Oh well, Let 'em write a letter to the editor to our one and only editor—W.R. Hearst."

"What about the critics, Scott? They're out there, you know. In the bushes. In the trees. Wrapped up in Duane's tie."

"Well, as Ben (where is he now?) Wearing once put it: 'It's not the critics we hate—it's the criticism.'"

"Let's put the critics behind us, Scott."

"OK. I'll take this one and you grab that one."

(Squeals are now heard. Police sirens scream. We move to further dialogue.)

"Wow! This further dialogue is nice! I'd much rather live here than in Manhattan."

"THE TREES, how they glisten. In the lane, children listen. We're happy tonight, walking in a . . ."

"God, how off key, and six months out of season."

"Quail? The little bastards never could carry a tune."

"Much less a sack of groceries."

"But what is a sack of groceries, Scott? What does it all mean?"

"It means we better start thanking those sweet, wonderful people to whom we owe so much for their assistance in perpetuating the Friday Column."

"Where do we start, Scott? With Jeff? Dan? Roy? Martha and George?"

"What about Richard, Meg and the general public?"

"Adolph, Winston and the Minnesota Vikings?"

"Trying to make me say me thanks FIRST, eh? Well, it WON'T WORK!"

"No thanks, Scott. Let there be none."

(In a brief interlude, Downie jumps off the Empire State Building and survives.)

"I'm feeling better, Steve."

"You're a better person for it, Scott."

"Well, Steve, I think I'll take my now-mangled right arm and toss my Collegian-column-writing pen into the fire. You may briefly squeak with pain, but he'll be silenced by a quick letter to the editor."

"And I, Scott, do hereby bequeath my 50 per cent of the Friday Column to my old pal and bosom buddy, Rollie the Doorknob, also known as Harvey the Broomstick Comet Brand of Soapy Dishwater. Here, Harvey."

(And so Harvey, Menaugh and Downie hop in a nearby 1953 Chevy pickup. They drive non-stop to Los Angeles where, after much soul-searching, they become nuns.)

Peace, brother.

KANSAS CITY—The May 4 tornadoes left $18,371,000 in damage and 184,804 cubic yards of debris in Missouri, the U.S. Corps of Engineers reported in a preliminary estimate Thursday.

Four deaths also were attributed to the storms, which caused damage to seven counties, Pettis, Cass, Jackson, Clay, Lafayette, Ray and Carroll.

Of the total, $16,115,000 was damage to private property, and $2,256,000 damage to public property.

Col. Richard Curl, Kansas City district engineer, said the corps will conduct detailed damage surveys and begin debris removal of public and eligible private property as soon as details are known.

The greatest damage was estimated at $12,655,000 at Sedalia, in Pettis County, with the next greatest, $3,380,000, at Pleasant Hill, in Cass County.

Other preliminary damage estimates, compiled by a team of 47 corps employees, were Jackson County $250,000, Clay County $191,000, Lafayette County $430,000, Ray County $665,000, and Carroll County $500,000.

DODGE CITY—An Air Midwest twin-engine propeller plane was forced to land and unload its six to eight passengers at the Dodge City Airport Thursday after a bomb threat was telephoned in to the Wichita Municipal Airport, Police Chief Oakley Ralph reported.

The call to the air terminal in Wichita from an anonymous source did not specify on which airliner the bomb had been planted. The Air Midwest flight had taken off from the Wichita airport and landed here to unload its passengers after being advised of the threat by radio.

After the plane was unloaded, the pilot taxied the aircraft to the northeast edge of the airport until firemen, police and airline official searched it but no bomb was found. The plane was refueled and passengers were reloaded for resumption of the flight to Denver, Colo., the airline officials said.

DHARRAN, Saudi Arabia—A mysterious explosion and pipeline fire in the heart of the world's greatest oil producing area was brought under control Thursday before it could cripple Saudi Arabia's oil production and export facilities, oil company officials said.

Though contained, the fire was still reported burning Thursday at the Abqaiq oil field in the desert about 35 miles from this oil center on the Persian Gulf.

The Arabian American Oil Co., Aramco, which operates the field and most Saudi oil production, said one employee was killed and 13 others were hospitalized with burns and other injuries. A U.S. Embassy official said the dead man was a Saudi foreman and that no Americans were believed to be among the injured.

The cause of the explosion was not immediately determined. American diplomats in Saudi Arabia said the possibility of sabotage was being investigated, and a source on Capitol Hill in Washington said he understood Palestinian terrorists had set off the giant blaze with satchel explosives to protest the possibility of a negotiated settlement between Israel and the Arabs.

CINCINNATI—A tree planted in honor of former President Richard Nixon has died of frostbite, according to the director of Cincinnati's city parks.

The 20-year-old tree, a bald cypress replanted after the 1968 election, has three frost cracks from the severe winter and was pronounced dead Thursday, parks director Fred Payne said.

The tree is part of the President's Grove, which was established at Eden Park in 1882.

Nixon says his Mideast policy prevented big-power conflict

WASHINGTON (AP)—Richard Nixon says he rejected as "sheer madness" a Soviet proposal that he send two American divisions into Israel during the 1973 war to help impose a cease-fire while Russian troops were moved into Egypt and Syria.

The former president, ranging over 5½ years of foreign policy in an interview broadcast Thursday night, said joint superpower intervention might have kept the Mideast peace but it would have raised "the possibility of a big-power conflict."

In the interview with David Frost, second in a five-part series of remembrances, Nixon took credit for preserving Egyptian President Anwar Sadat from "a coup or worse" by persuading Israel to release its hold on an encircled Egyptian army.

Recalling the implicit pressures he brought to bear on the Israeli government, Nixon said that like the storied Mafia "Godfather," he "gave them an offer that they could not refuse"—a promise of unflagging U.S. support whenever Israel came under attack.

ISRAEL subsequently relented and the stage was set for negotiated interim settlements with Egypt and Syria.

The timing of the broadcast of Nixon's interview led President Carter to move up his news conference by five hours to avoid a conflict.

Carter told reporters Thursday he had seen only "a small part" of the first interview and did not intend to watch the second. "It didn't change my opinion of President Nixon," he said. "I personally think he did violate the law and did commit impeachable offenses."

Carter added: "Most of the people do agree with what I have just said. I think he's mistaken."

The interview with Nixon was shown over a makeshift network of 155 stations. Frost is paying Nixon $600,000 for the interviews, plus a percentage of the gross.

Letters to the editor

'Applause' given to library

Editor,

I would like to extend a one-handed round of applause to the staff of Farrell Library for a recent inconvenience and unadult manner in the matter of some "overdue" books.

I had returned three books before their due date but about two weeks after their return I received a notice of a fine. Thinking that someone probably had made just a simple mistake and one which could be easily corrected, I went to the library to try and find out why I had received the overdue notice.

After talking with the main office, I was told that I could either pay the fine or, if I had returned the books, I could try to locate them in the stacks.

TWO OF THE three books I found in the stacks nicely reshelfed. The third was missing. I pulled the two (which still had the return check out cards in them) and returned them to the window, and asked if there was some way of checking to see if someone else may have checked out the third book; there was and someone had.

After gathering this proof I was then told that the librarian could only cancel the fine and I would have to come back. I therefore asked the staff person to write down the name of the person that had checked out the third book and the date he checked it out and made an appointment to see the librarian for the next morning.

Upon seeing the librarian the next morning I was told the fine would be canceled. This however did not end the episode, for the next day I received another notice and promptly went over to the library again. I was told not to worry about it for someone had probably not checked the record. I went away at last contented. Then one week later another overdue notice was again in the mail.

FOR THE fourth time I went back to the library to talk with the librarian but this time it was a different one. I was told I would have to pay the fine or by the third notice the University would hold my transcripts—that was the third notice and it did not say anything about holding up my transcripts. To say the least I was by this time becoming very frustrated, but once again I explained the whole situation. She still insisted I had to pay the fine because the return check out cards had been stamped after the due date.

After debating over the issue and getting nowhere, I finally said I would not pay the fine and then asked who I had to go see to settle the matter. At this point she became very defensive and said in so many words that the library hardly ever made any mistakes. She treated me as if I was some child who had no right to question her authority.

SHE THEN proceeded to tear up the fine very angrily while all the time spouting away with her mouth. We were both mad by this time.

I felt this situation should not have had to end this way for I did not wish to ruin her day or mine but I also was not going to pay the fine. There are many people employed at the library and where there is a human element there is the possibility of error. It is too bad some people can not admit this.

So for the inconvenience someone on the staff caused me by not checking in the books properly and the unadult manner which the librarian extended to me, I would like to give a one-handed round of applause quieter than the comments which this article I hope will cause.

Lonie Burch

Sophomore in pre-vet

a round of one-handed applause

... has been written to provide readers with a different—usually irreverent—view of some rather conspicuous happenings occurring at K-State and in Manhattan.

MANY THINGS occur which should be brought to the attention of K-Staters, if only to highlight the ludicrousness of a given event.

Assorted campus and city organizations, including the Office of Security and Traffic, the Union, the Riley County Police Department and Physical Plant have "earned" a one-handed round of applause this semester.

Some may believe these organizations didn't deserve the Collegian's unfettered, "malicious" criticism, while others may think it long overdue.

As in many things, it's simply a matter of taste.

FOR MANY, the thought of criticizing someone for making a mistake is repulsive although it might help to keep the same party from making the same mistake again.

Thus, for the final, deafening one-handed round of applause for this semester, the attitude that some organizations, persons or institutions are beyond reproach receives a one-handed round of applause quieter than a self-righteous look of disdain.

Later.

Letters to the editor give readers a chance to express their views

Editor,

I am writing in response to the letter "Editorials thoughtless," published in Wednesday's Collegian.

I CAN only say that this is a gross untruth.

In the past, I have written letters to the editor of the Collegian, most of which stated negative opinions.

I did not write them to tear down anything, but to make people aware of the situations, that I felt were unfair or in some way threatened our basic rights.

IT SEEMS the writer of the letter in question does not like people criticizing the "American Life."

If the gentleman would venture to take a look at our country's history, he would see that the only reason we have the good life he is so complacent about, is because the American people have spoken out against injustice and fought for a better way of life for everyone.

Newspapers have been a major force in protecting our rights and exposing threats against them (i.e. the Washington Post and Watergate).

THE USE of letters to the editor gives the average person the freedom to express his opinions which is an integral part of a democratic society.

So far from being thoughtless and unimportant, letters to the editor are important to the American way of life and help preserve our freedom.

Editorial incorrect

Editor,

Re: Editorial on "Evaluations merit more consideration" by Ken Miller.

Again I was disappointed in the irresponsibility of the Collegian editors as I have been many times this semester. The article on evaluations was obviously not only based on heresay, but it could also be detrimental to the system of tenure and reappointment which we have established here at K-State.

FIRSTLY, the evaluations which are being held at this time, if there actually are any, have nothing to do with tenure and reappointment decisions, but are strictly a guide for the instructors on how they can better their quality of instruction.

The tenure and reappointment computer cards which originate in the Office of Educational Resources were completed before April 15, and decisions are now being made by the College Councils. The decisions which are being made by the Councils however, have nothing to do with recommending either rehiring or dismissal, which was another fallacy which your editorial portrayed, but instead deciding if there was enough information based on the number of students enrolled in the class versus the number responding to the five question questionnaire to recommend the consideration of the evidence by the department head.

The College Councils as a rule do not recommend the reappointment or dismissal of an instructor, which brings me to another fallacy in your editorial; no instructor at this University is required to undergo a student evaluation.

In the future please consult someone who knows the facts before making broad assumptions. It could add a great deal of credibility to the editorial comments which throughout the semester have been greatly lacking.

Carter's energy proposals 'confusing set of regulations'

President Jimmy Carter's energy proposals, as presented to Congress, are a "confusing set of regulations" which will do little to increase the energy supply in the United States, K-State energy expert Robert Robel said.

ROBEL, professor of environmental biology, returned last week from Washington, D.C., where he is a project leader in Congress's Office of Technology Assessment. The office is a politically independent research arm of Congress which examines the effect Carter's proposals will have on the nation. Robel is also the chairman of the Kansas Energy Advisory Council.

"It's such a confusing set of regulations," Robel said of the proposal. "I can't see how it will achieve its purpose."

"It's going to be so complicated, if it's approved no one will understand it. The people who will really benefit from it are the lawyers, who will have to interpret it," he said.

"I'm not saying it's all bad, because there are some good strong points in there. I think there are about six things that are in his proposals that will probably pass and will be effective."

The strong points include proposals to provide tax credits for homes using solar energy and insulation, a tax on gas-guzzling automobiles, labeling the energy-efficiency of air conditioners and appliances and construction of coal and nuclear power plants instead of oil and natural-gas powered plants, Robel said.

ONE OF the weak points of Carter's plan is the lack of proposal to develop greater energy sources.

"Where in there does it give you more energy?" he said. "There's nothing."

Another is the combination of energy policies with welfare programs. It is wrong for energy tax revenue to be returned to low-income families as rebates—welfare should be conducted separately from energy programs, Robel said.

Robel is in favor of Carter's proposed tax on gasoline if the money is returned to energy areas, but he said he doesn't think it will reduce consumption. He pointed out gasoline prices have doubled since 1973.

"Five cents won't reduce consumption, but 50 cents might," Robel said. "Where consumption can be reduced is by changing the mix of cars on the highway toward more small cars, the purpose of the big car tax."

"Taxes sound simple to impose, but when you look at the red tape on collection and rebates, you're talking about a bureaucratic mess you'd never believe," he said.

ROBEL said "none of the President's program will be passed by this summer and it's going to take a long time to get it sorted out."

"If everything in Carter's plan is adopted and works as planned, which is being very optimistic, and if we can mine 400 million tons of coal more per year, we'll still have to import much more oil than we are now or face a drastic shortage," he said.

Three to a room means lower rates

Students living in the larger residence halls could have their housing payments reduced next year if they are willing to live in a three-person room.

Housing Director Thomas Frith said people who want to live in such rooms would get $100 taken off their bill. Living in a three-person room would be strictly voluntary, he said.

So far there has not been any response to the idea, which was devised to create extra room for students.

"We don't like turning people away if they need someplace to live," Frith said.

In residence halls such as Goodnow and Marlatt the rooms would be located in the basement, which is the only place with rooms which have beds that could be bunked.

Cooks crave cool cocktails

Question: What did the pig say when the farmer grabbed him by the tail? Answer: "This is the end of me!" And so The Great Cooking Column Conspiracy comes to an end.

Just think, you readers have witnessed history; Creative Cooking is the first food column to appear in the Collegian. For that matter, it is the only cooking column that I know of in any university paper.

MY THANKS to editor Roy "Heartburn" Wenzl for daring me to dictate these delicious developments of devious delights. Although I have received some flack from fellow journalists, all in all it has been a "stomach-warming" experience.

This column also has given me a chance to mingle with the opposite sex. What could be a better line to use on some slightly inebriated coed than "Hey sweetie, wanna come to the house and watch my yeast rise?"

I hope that some of these recipes have appealed to you off-campus students. The whole idea of creative cooking (not baking) is to disregard directions which specify exact amounts. If you want food that tastes the same every time, go to a restaurant.

This column is a testimony of what a person can do without having a masters degree in nutrition. I don't know how many times I have been accosted by females who have memorized nutrition texts concerning the chemical and photosynthetic properties of corn starch, but can't even stirfry zucchini!

And so it is fitting that I reveal my favorite recipes that deal with the spirits. Every chef worth his weight in blonde brownies knows what an asset alcohol can be not only in the preparation of food but also in the preparation of the chef.

Anyway, I will now reveal my recipes guaranteed to whisk away the dead week deliriums and eradicate every ounce of knowledge after that last final. Remember: The recipes are legitimate although this author might not be. Stay healthy.

Misconceptions pose problems

Tenure purpose misunderstood by most students, some faculty members

By JEFF HOLYFIELD
Staff Writer

In recent years, tenure at K-State and across the nation has become a subject clouded by misconceptions, rumors and misinformation.

Almost all students and some faculty members don't fully understand the process of awarding tenure or what it means, according to John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs.

"In the past, the procedure for awarding tenure has been very well understood by faculty members," Chalmers, who has been at K-State 14 years, said. "It has only been in the last dozen years that faculty members that didn't gain tenure came up and said 'Hey, I didn't know this meant this.'"

"In the past few years, tenure has taken on the aura of job security," he said. "It's academic freedom, it's not job security."

The purpose of tenure is to provide faculty members with the assurance they will not be fired because they have unpopular ideas or unorthodox methods of teaching.

"WE HAVE to make the procedure for getting tenure more explicit so that everyone understands it," Chalmers said.

"In general, the procedure for awarding tenure needs to be more definite and clearer to everyone because society has moved toward a society of litigation," he said. "If people don't get what they think they deserve they want to take you to court."

Frank Orazem, Faculty Senate president, disagrees with Chalmers.

"Faculty members are more cognizant of this procedure now than they were in the past," he said.

"Historically, tenure has been used for developing the atmosphere of an institution where any ideas are perfectly appropriate for examination by faculty members in their area of competence," Chalmers said.

"Tenure gives you the freedom to ask questions that you might get clobbered for later for asking," said Ray Keen, professor of horticulture and forestry.

TENURE dates back 400 or 500 years. It originally insured a teacher couldn't be fired because he had wild ideas, Keen said.

According to the K-State Faculty Handbook, after a probationary period faculty members should have "...permanent or continuous tenure and their services should be terminated only for adequate cause..."

The handbook defines adequate cause as professional incompetence, misconduct or unethical behavior or bona fide financial exigency and stipulates faculty members should be given a year's notice prior to termination.

To gain tenure, faculty members above the rank of instructor serve a probationary period of approximately five years and must gain reappointment at the end of each year.

K-State faculty members usually acquire tenure upon achieving the rank of associate professor, Chalmers said.

HOWEVER, seniority alone does not guarantee a faculty member tenure.

"You don't gain tenure by not doing anything bad," Chalmers said. "You gain tenure by doing positive things."

Faculty members nominated for tenure are judged in four different areas. The areas are: instruction, research and creative endeavors, public and institutional service, professional activities and leadership and service within the instructor's profession.

Faculty members being considered for tenure should currently perform well in all four categories, excel in one and should show they will continue to perform at the same levels, Chalmers said.

"If there are substantial doubts about the faculty members' ability to continue to perform at these high levels, they shouldn't acquire tenure," he said.

"A UNIVERSITY is only as good as its faculty," he said.

"The only way for Kansas State to continue to be a first-rate University is to have a first-rate faculty and the only way to guarantee first-rate faculty is to give tenure only if that person deserves tenure."

"This year's tenure decisions are going to determine how good the University is going to be in 10 or 15 years," Chalmers said.

"If a department wants to be an excellent department, it should tenure only those that can add to the excellence of the department," he said.

ALTHOUGH a department should give tenure to faculty members to insure its continued excellence, a department head should be careful not to give too many persons tenure, thus reducing the number of new persons who could come into a department with fresh ideas, Chalmers said.

The department heads are responsible for nominating faculty for tenure.

The department head, before giving a teacher tenure, must consult with all tenured faculty members within the department, the appropriate student council group and non-tenured and tenured faculty in his or an associated department, Chalmers said.

Often, a department head will ask experts within the field what they think of a faculty member's work, to better gauge his work, he said.

"He may and frequently does consult with faculty members within the field," Chalmers said.

AFTER consulting with the several groups, the department head makes a recommendation to the dean of his college. If the recommendation of the department head differs from that of the tenured faculty or the students, he must detail in writing why his recommendation was different.

The tenure recommendations are reviewed during a meeting of the deans and the University vice president for academic affairs, who vote on each candidate for tenure.

Despite the probationary period, the recommendations and the meeting of the Tenure gives you the freedom to ask questions that you might get clobbered for later.

deans, some faculty members don't think it's too difficult to get tenure at K-State.

"It's pretty easy to get tenure—at least that's the way it's been in the past," said Shanto Iyengar, assistant professor of political science. "I would say you'd have to be an absolute idiot to not get tenure."

IYENGAR said he doesn't believe tenure is necessary for academic freedom and he doesn't understand K-State's tenure process.

Students have only gained a say in the tenure process only 12 years ago, but now they occupy a large niche within the tenure process.

Members of the various college councils conduct student evaluations of instructors being considered for tenure and interpret the results of the evaluations to determine if they should be considered in the tenure process.

Some of the evaluation results aren't included because of lack of student response or an especially poor response from one group of students.

Although students' opinions of an instructor may be fickle, students' judgments of an instructor are rarely wrong and are seriously considered, Chalmers said.

DESPITE the high consideration given students' judgments, students involved in the process feel students don't understand the tenure process, tenure in general and don't realize how important their evaluations are.

"I don't think the students actually realize what they're saying when they say, 'Yes, I think this faculty member should receive tenure,' on the evaluation card," said Pat Sargent, student representative to Faculty Senate.

"They (students) don't realize what it is," Sargent said. "That's one of the major problems."

Musical tone changes with location

By CHRIS JAMES
Collegian Reporter

Music has definite geographic boundaries. Different places are known for different "sounds."

Even before the "Liverpool sound" made it to America there were the "Chicago blues," "New Orleans Jazz" and "Greenwich Village Folkies."

Now different locations have different styles of music within the same era. Today if you want a complete change in musical climate, all you have to do is be willing to travel.

IN NASHVILLE they say there's no such thing as a "Nashville sound," which is odd, because the musicians and recording engineers down there are making a comfortable living providing it.

Recording artists have been known to come from far away to get the Nashville sound. What makes it so special? It's a combination of three things: the studio musicians, the relaxed atmosphere of the southern capital and the cheerful mixture of homespun rawness and sheer professionalism of Nashville's country musicians.

THE NEXT logical place to go is Austin, Texas which has been called the "New Nashville." The refugees from Nashville who wanted to play country music, but didn't want the glittery image found a home in Austin.

The Austin image is a tough-guy image. The musicians have been labeled "outlaws." They don't dress up. If anything, they dress down. The uniform is blue-jeans and T-shirts. These guys are the rowdy heavy drinkers . . . and many people relate to that image.

LOS ANGELES in the late fifties and early sixties was "Surf City." The band most responsible for this was the Beach Boys. The highlight of the Beach Boys appeal was vocals that even the Beatles copied.

Even though surf music went out as fast as it came in, the modern California singers like Joni Mitchell and America still seem to capture the sun and the beach in their music. And the Beach Boys, now in their 16th year of recording, proved that they could expand and change.

The music of Los Angeles is characterized by studio perfection. In fact some observers gripe that the L.A. product is too polished, the musicians don't really sound like that. They say that a lot of the L.A. groups are a let down in concert because they can't live up to the perfect sound found on their albums.

DETROIT has a distinct sound too. When talking about music, it is better known as Motown. This is "soul city," the home of rhythm and blues.

The Motown sound has been a mainstay in music for three decades. It is the first black owned and operated record company in America.

From their first million seller, "Shop Around" by the Miracles to Stevie Wonder's "Songs In The Key of Life" their success story was no secret. They had something every black kid in America could identify with.

THERE WAS always a danceable lead, solid bass lines and a sort of watering down of soul for the white pop market. Most notable in that category was Diana Ross and The Supremes. Some of the hard core rhythm and blues people did not quite approve of it, but it sold. The formula worked.

In upstate New York a group that was once Bob Dylan's back-up band started the "Woodstock sound" around the end of last decade. This was "the Band." They made a pleasant kind of music that includes dead, muffled drums, funky saxophone and horn arrangements, loose vocal harmonies and super-strong songs.

THE NEARBY enormous New York City is better-known for jazz. The world famous Newport Jazz Festival is held there every year. It features the top names in the field. Jazz giants such as Miles Davis, Eric Gale, Steve Gadd and Herbie Hancock are residents.

Even the rock of New York City is jazz-oriented. Blood, Sweat & Tears is a good example.

In New York perfection is the rule. Although the sound is super-polished, there's not as much overdubbing as is done in Los Angeles. The drum sound is crisp and tight. Intricate horn arrangements and strings are also common.

Usually record companies, as illustrated by Motown, tend to lean in one direction. The fact that the record companies become connected with the city they are in, along with the fact that innovators get copied by those around them are the reasons why cities get labeled with "a sound."

'Dick and Jane' provide fun look at hardships

BY BECKY BARTLETT
Collegian Reporter

An escapade of slapstick comedy starring a modern day Bonnie and Clyde, makes "Fun with Dick and Jane," a movie well worth seeing.

Dick (George Segal) and Jane (Jane Fonda) are a typical storybook married couple who suddenly find themselves in a financial disaster when Dick loses his job. In an effort to maintain the "American middle class" way of life, they indulge in a scheme to reestablish their financial status.

The plot involves a series of somewhat unbelievable, but entertaining episodes in which Dick and Jane attempt to find alternate methods of income. Dick seeks unemployment compensation and food stamp benefits, while Jane gets a part time modeling job.

THE MOVIE contains both the believable and the unbelievable. Believable is the way in which Dick and Jane find themselves in a financial rut and all the problems they have in trying to pick themselves back up.

Unbelievable is the way in which they succeed in reestablishing financial security—through robbing everything from motels to a church.

In one particularly funny scene, Dick and Jane rob the telephone company and receive a round of applause from the customers waiting in line.

JANE FONDA'S role as an upper middle class housewife is a delight to the viewing audience. A college graduate who has never worked a day in her life, she shows spunk and the determination of a young housewife who must take charge of a bad situation.

George Segal's performance as an unemployed ex-executive is adequate. His sudden realization that he was broke and the ways he found to deal with it are amusing but somewhat unrealistic at times for a man of his supposed age and caliber.

ONE MAJOR disappointment of the movie was the performance of Ed McMahon, who played Dick's former boss. His portrayal of a big-business executive, especially in one scene where he was supposed to be drunk, was neither funny or believable. Nor were his attempts at playing the playboy towards Jane a justice to the viewing audience.

The attitude of "crime pays," which abounds in the film leaves the viewer somewhat baffled. The theme of the movie seems to target at the idea that "if at first you don't succeed—steal from those that have." Though the fast pace of the movie was entertaining, it tends to leave the viewer wondering if he got anything out of it.

Famous detective's brother rollicks across the screen

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, Smarter Brother," will be shown in the Union Forum Hall Friday and Saturday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. and Sunday at 7:30 p.m. Admission price is $1.25.

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Collegian Reviewer

Some of Mel Brooks' humorous magic seems to have rubbed off on Gene Wilder.

Wilder, known for his acting in Brooks' comedies, "Young Frankenstein" and "Blazing Saddles" is the star and author of his own comedy, "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes' Smarter Brother," a film reeking with Brooks-like comedy.

Set in Great Britain in 1891, "Holmes" is a rollicking, slapstick adventure of a young stage star who, motivated by blackmail, is forced to steal an important document from her fiancée, the Foreign Secretary of State.

The girl, Jenny Hill, solicits the help of Sherlock Holmes, but the detective instead has his younger brother, Sigerson, handle the case.

Sigerson, by way of brilliant logic and a keen sense of criminal science, tracks the blackmailer and eventually returns the document to its rightful owner.

Wilder plays the crafty Sigerson, a man engulfed with contempt and jealousy for his more famous older brother. Wilder does a superb job as the pseudo-intelligent detective capable of handling any situation, either gracefully or clumsily.

Madeline Kahn is the opera singer who, by her own admission, is "simultaneously funny and sad." Kahn demonstrated her many talents as she sang and danced and she is rapidly becoming the most versatile actress in Hollywood, sharing the honors with Carol Burnett.

Marty Feldman plays the Scotland Yard detective, Orville. Feldman, known for his intriguing, bulging eyes, is becoming no less famous for his acting as he was funny and convincing in his own, unique way.

Dom DeLouise is the Italian blackmailer, Gambetti. DeLouise is silly and crazy, and this combination made his portrayal humorous.

At times it seemed that Brooks had a guiding hand while Wilder was writing the story. When referring to his older brother, Sigerson called him "Sheerluck," rather than Sherlock. The reason for the blackmail was the contents of a letter Jenny sent to a lover which said, "I want to touch your wingle."

The movies Brooks and Wilder are producing are a much needed facet of the film industry. Too often, sex and violence are the themes of today's movies, and Brooks and Wilder have brought the humor back to the screen, devoid of the depressing aspects of life.

"The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes' Smarter Brother" is funny and it is the type of movie that will still be funny when seen on the late show 30 years from now.

Southside Johnny shifts emphasis; listener disappointed

BY RICHARD SITTS
Collegian Reviewer

This album was one of those very exceptions that made me tear my hair out until I had my grubby little hands on a copy. This meant calling the local record store everyday while reading rave reviews of the album and foaming at the mouth.

However, despite the reviews, I have to disagree. "This Time It's For Real" by Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes is good, but not as good as its predecessor, the band's debut, "I Don't Want To Go Home." Being good just doesn't stack up to pure excellence.

The Jukes have strayed away from the straight rhythm and blues that dominated their first album and have incorporated more 50's style rock n' roll. Even the pose for the cover looks like something Sha-Na-Na would come up with. This shift in style has weakened the band's sound.

As a producer and songwriter, Miami Steve Van Zandt has come a long way, and this album showcases his talents more than ever. Van Zandt had a hand in writing eight of the 10 songs here, co-writing three with Bruce Springsteen.

Once again, Van Zandt's title track is a classic. This one takes the cake for being the album's stand out rocker.

"Without Love" is a nice melodic cut. If anyone ever made a movie about the Jersey shore

(the Jukes' roaming grounds), this song, with its horn arrangement in the middle, would be the perfect soundtrack theme. Southside Johnny steps out to let The Coasters take over on "Check

Mr. Popeye," a cute novelty tune which takes some getting used to.

Van Zandt's "First Night" has The Five Satins' and Johnnie's vocals complementing each other perfectly. This cut works well as a nostalgic return to the 50's.

The Latin-flavored "Little Girl So Fine" features backup harmonies by The Drifters.

From here on out it's all Johnny and the Jukes. "I Ain't Got The Fever No More" is Van Zandt's answer to Springsteen's "The Fever" off the first album.

Side two closes out with two strong Springsteen-Van Zandt compositions. With its horn and string arrangements, "Love On

The Wrong Side Of Town" is one of the more memorable cuts.

Jungle sound effects prove to be a unique if not interesting introduction to "When You Dance." The band slowly picks up amid trumpeting elephants and chanting natives and then really cooks. This is destined to become a great encore number.

Johnny's vocals and harmonica-playing are stronger than ever throughout the album. The Jukes are ably assisted by the very capable Miami Horns and Sugar Strings.

Even though this album didn't quite live up to my expectations, it's still a very good album, and a worthy addition to anyone's collection.

Turner's one-game stint as Brave's manager halted

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Just like any other well-run business, baseball doesn't bring people in off the streets. You need experience ... unless, of course, you're planning to buy a team. Then you just show the color of your money and you're welcomed into the lodge with open arms.

Ted Turner, a broadcasting executive and yachtsman of some renown, was sitting around one day a year and a half ago with $10 million laying around when he decided it would be nice to own a major league franchise. The Atlanta Braves haven't been the same since.

When Captain Teddy waved his green in front of baseball's bigwigs, they said, "Sure, come right in." Little did they know what they were getting into. But then they once gave the go-ahead to Charley Finley, too.

Sports

OWNERS NEED not know the difference between a ball and a walk, as long as they keep signing checks. But managing ... ah, that's quite another matter. Turner, though, has other ideas. He pays the bills, so why shouldn't he be able to wind up the toys?

"This is rather unusual," said National League President Chub Feeney when Turner decided to become his team's manager this week.

Well, he didn't really become the manager. That would have been a violation of Major League Rule 20E and we all know that no respectable owner would want to trifle with the rules. Rule 20E prohibits any player or manager from owning any piece of the club that employs him.

In this era of huge free-agent payoffs, that rule may turn out to be obsolete. But since it's on the books, Turner simply circumvented it, signing himself to a coach's contract and telling Braves Manager Dave Bristol to get lost for 10 days or so.

ALL SPRUCED up in a regulation uniform and spraying the dugout with tobacco juice as if he'd been at it all his life, Turner managed the Braves to their 17th consecutive loss.

"In the stands, you need a cup to chew," explained Turner, who likes to be just one of the boys. "In the dugout, you just spit."

If he tries that act at the America's Cup, he's likely to get just as quick a thumb as Feeney gave him Thursday.

THE EXPLANATION which Feeney offered was that Turner, who has been the Braves' principal owner for the last year and a half, was inexperienced as a manager.

"Well, you know," Turner said, "how are you going to get experience?"

On the job, obviously. Casey Stengel must have started some place, right? So did every other manager. Turner

'Broadway Joe' signs with Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Joe Namath, the flamboyant quarterback whose playboy image with the New York Jets earned him the nickname "Broadway Joe," signed with the Los Angeles Rams Thursday and said he didn't intend to change his life-style.

Texas beats K.C.

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Veteran Gaylord Perry ended a personal four-game losing streak Thursday night, hurling a four-hitter for the Texas Rangers to throttle the slumping Kansas City Royals 2-0.

The two teams, who fought a 20-minute brawl Saturday night in Texas, played Thursday night without so much as one argument.

The 38-year-old Perry, 2-4, is one victory short of becoming the third pitcher to record 100 or more victories in both leagues. He allowed only two runners to reach third.

"I admit I like to drink on occasion," a grinning Namath said at a press conference. "I admit I love women, and I go to night clubs occasionally. But I don't plan to tone down on my social life; despite what you've heard, I'm really rather conservative."

What effect the signing of the colorful and controversial quarterback will have on the Rams' conservative style of play must wait until next fall.

Although Namath was pro football's premiere passer in the late 1960s, knee injuries and a porous Jets' offensive line rendered him largely ineffective the past few seasons.

Kevin Brown

Just chasing rainbows...

On Saturday, Jan. 15, Mike Evans scored 40 points in a losing effort as K-State fell to the University of Colorado in Boulder, 78-75.

That was the lead story in this semester's first paper. Since that issue, sports at K-State has come a long way.

The basketball teams, men's and women's, won Big Eight Championships; the A-dorm came under the direction of the Department of Housing; Bob Prince, Chris Muelbach and Doug Knauss earned allon Jan. 22. After losing an 18-point lead, the Cats picked themselves up from the floor and beat Nebraska, 60-50, for the title. It was good to see the women cut down the nets after winning.

I REMEMBER standing outside the Oklahoma locker room after K-State had beaten the Sooners, 68-55, to clinch the Big 8 title. My left elbow was in a cast, broken in three places when Casey Scott knocked me down playing basketball.

Sooner Coach Dave Bliss came out of the locker room after the defeat to the reporters waiting for him. He looked at my cast and said, "What did you do, ask a bad question?"

"No, I broke it playing basketball."

"Well, you writers should let athletes play basketball."

EVERYONE LAUGHED at Bliss' comments. He's that kind of guy. His team had just lost the biggest game of the year, yet Bliss still had that special quality we all should have—the ability to laugh in difficult situations.

It's sad to think I'll be leaving K-State in a few days. I've had a lot of good times (and a lot of bad) in Wildcat land. I've spent several days trying to put it all into perspective.

I remember the frustrations; the things I should have done, but never did; the things I shouldn't have done, but did; mostly, I remember the people I've met along the way.

That's what it's all about—people. I owe a lot of people a lot of things.

THERE'S CASEY Scott, who stayed up to talk to me until 3 one morning about my problems. He'll never know how much that means to me.

There's Roy Wenzl, who had faith in me and gave me a chance. I didn't always fulfil his faith, but I tried.

There's Bill Brown, who's been more than a teacher and adviser to me. He's been a friend.

There's Kristi Short and the Gamma Phi's who have always had a smile and kind word for me.

THERE'S KEN Miller, Bob Rugh, Gary Fenton—the list is endless.

The other night, I called a friend from KU whom I haven't seen in a long time. He's graduating this May and I wanted to know what his future plans are.

He's a sports nut, too, and used to play football, but an injury ended his career prematurely. Football was his life at one time and when he found he couldn't play it anymore, he was down for a long time.

He finally overcame that obstacle but said he still is searching for something.

I asked what he was searching for.

"I don't know, Kevin. I guess I'm just chasing rainbows in the sky."

"Just chasing rainbows in the sky."

I guess we all are.

Brainwashed

American status in track; the football team found an exciting runner in Mack Green; and finally, Jack Hartman threw a scare into all of us by leaving for Oklahoma State, only to shock us more by returning to Wildcat land two days later.

THE HIGHLIGHTS are too many to count, but right up there at the top is the Wildcats' 86-83 victory over the Jayhawks in Lawrence. The game was tense from the start and several times it looked as if the Hawks would win.

But Ken Koenigs called timeout when KU had none left. The resulting technical foul and free throw by Curtis Redding sank Kansas and kept the Cats on the track for the Big 8 title.

The women's basketball team also won the Big 8 title in Boulder

Ali next for Norton? Not a sure deal yet

NEW YORK (AP)—"I'll believe it when I see it," Ken Norton said Thursday of another fight with Muhammad Ali. And it's doubtful he'll see such a fight in Brazil for a talked-about $14 million.

Norton has good reasons for his "show me" attitude despite his stature-building 58-second demolition of Duane Bobick Wednesday night.

A proposed fight for Rio de Janeiro in the fall in which Ali would get $12 million and Norton would get $2.25 million appears to be nothing more than that—a proposal.

"At present we do not have a deal," Herbert Muhammad Ali's manager, said Thursday of the Rio fight which Californian, Ben Thompson, is trying to put together. "It ran out some time ago."

THOMPSON PAID Herbert Muhammad $100,000 to take it (an Ali fight against the Norton-Bobick winner) off the market for 60 days," Herbert said. "We did that but that's over."

Herbert Muhammad's attorney, Charles Lomax, said that Thompson had to come up with $900,000 about April 2 and that he didn't. The $100,000 belongs to Herbert Muhammad.

*54% of the students surveyed (50/92) are still in the process of developing a philosophy for life, while 43% of the students surveyed have, for the most part, determined their philosophy for life.

*80% of the students surveyed (70/87) felt the University provided an environment for the development of a philosophy for life.

*90% of the students interviewed (66/73) expressed the opinion that there is a God who is both infinite and personal.

*35% of the students surveyed (32/91) have seriously read through the New Testament of the Bible.

*54% of the students surveyed (50/93) expressed the opinion that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

*59% of the students surveyed (50/85) expressed interest that if they could know and experience God's love personally, they would be interested.

We do not claim complete accuracy in the results of the questionnaire, but we do feel it does give some indication of the spiritual atmosphere on this campus.

Senate asks more aging benefits

A faculty retirement recommendation which would provide a five per cent benefit increase was among the highlights of this semester's Faculty Senate action.

If approved by the Kansas Board of Regents, the current K-State contribution to retirement benefits would increase from five to 10 per cent. Benefits would rise at a rate of 1.25 per cent per year for the next four years.

THE RECOMMENDATION states the increase would allow "K-State to attract and retain outstanding faculty, faculty to retire before age 70 with dignity and the assurance of financial security, and provide faculty with less need to rely on Social Security benefits."

Senate also approved a route sequence chart which streamlines approval methods for all course and curriculum changes, degree offerings and graduate degrees at K-State.

This chart provides methods for making academic changes at K-State where previously no uniform method existed, said Carol Francq, Academic Affairs Committee chairman.

Carter says Nixon at fault

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter expressed a personal belief Thursday that Richard M. Nixon "did violate the law" in handling the Watergate scandal, but suggested the former president has convinced himself he was innocent.

FOLLOWING a formal television-radio news conference, Carter was surrounded by reporters seeking his reaction to the initial Nixon interview on Watergate with David Frost which was broadcast last week. "It didn't change my opinion about President Nixon," said Carter, adding that he watched only "a small part" of the interview.

"I personally think that he did violate the law, and I think he did commit impeachable offenses. I think he doesn't think he did...I think he has rationalized in his own mind that he did all these things for the benefit of his staff members and so forth, and that he didn't have any criminal intent. I think he's mistaken."

Carter called the news conference originally to report on his six-day trip to London and Geneva.

THE PRESIDENT said his participation in London summits with the leaders of other major democratic nations helped spark "a quiet sense that we have justified reasons for confidence."

He said the leaders he met with came away with "a renewed spirit of hope and confidence" that they can compete successfully with the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies.

On other topics, Carter said: —Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) the 1972 Democratic presidential candidate, was "mistaken" in arguing last weekend that Carter's economic policies closely resemble those of former Republican President Gerald Ford. Carter cited a variety of social welfare plans he has proposed, ranging from more public works to special efforts to combat youth unemployment.

—HE DOES not view McGovern or California Gov. Edmund Brown as political threats in the next presidential election year, jokingly suggesting that he might not be interested in seeking reelection in 1980. "I feel quite secure in my position," Carter said.

—Israel continues to have a special relationship with the United States but, "I don't think that there can be any reasonable hope for a settlement of the Middle Eastern question...without a homeland for the Palestinians." But he said details on such a homeland should await further negotiations.

—FBI agents should not be immune from prosecution on charges of illegal entries carried out while they may have been on assignment. Carter, saying the agents merit "no special excuse," endorsed Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell's handling of investigations into FBI activities that already have led to one federal court indictment.

—Carter pictured McGovern as the only prominent Democrat who has questioned his programs. But, when asked if there was a danger of losing liberal support, he said, "There's always that danger."

Film records 3-D image

Classes to study holography

Holography, a method of recording on film the three-dimensional information about an object, will be the subject of two classes offered by the Department of Physics next semester.

Although introduced in 1948, this technique of recording image without the use of traditional lenses was not made practical until the invention of the laser in the 1960s.

"The practical use of holography is only about 10 to 12 years old," said Charles Hathaway, professor of physics and instructor for next semester's holography courses.

"The largest use of holograms today is in stress analysis," Hathaway said. "It's beginning to be used in advertising and should be in communications and journalism before long. It will be useful in many other fields in the future."

Holograms are produced by scattering light off an object. What is recorded in the film is the interference pattern of a plane wave and the wave scattered from an object. When laser or filtered light is projected through the film, the image of the object is reproduced in three dimensions. A moving hologram, like the one displayed in Cardwell, consists of over 100 single holograms.

"The picture of the girl in the hologram in Cardwell was first shot with a normal movie camera," Hathaway said. "Then a hologram was made of each frame. Actually, this is a series of two-dimensional holograms which appear three dimensional because of our binocular vision."

High costs are a factor limiting the use of holography, Hathaway said. However, he explained that as the technology, becomes better developed, costs will fall.

"Holography is a rapidly growing area," Hathaway said. "Our classes teach the fundamentals of holography, and give the students a lot of experience in the making of holograms. Students can work on projects in holography dealing with their major areas."

K-Staters to form support panel

A group of K-State students forming a pre-chapter of the Native American Solidarity Committee (NASC) in Manhattan will meet at 2 p.m. Saturday at 1501 Humboldt.

NASC is an organization comprised mostly of non-Indians who support Indian causes. The committee was established after the occupation of Wounded Knee in February, 1973.

Interested students or residents are welcome to attend and may contact Dave Colburn at 537-9582 for further information.

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.

2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next Fall during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Summer students won't be bothered with construction

Construction on the campus bikeway system this summer will not create a burden to summer students, according to Vincent Cool, assistant to the vice president for University Development.

Cool said construction work will not make any major physical changes on campus.

"The only actual physical changes will be some lines on pavement, the erection of some signs and the placement of some more bike racks," he said. "There may be some barriers put up while lines are being painted, but that's all."

The date to begin construction has not yet been set, because the city must first have the bikeway plan approved by the federal government.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer: If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: If a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer: Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer: Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer: Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

New policy to stop student loan abuse

By DAVE KAUP
Collegian Reporter

Emergency student loans will be smaller after this semester, but more students may receive the loans, due to a new policy approved Wednesday by the University Financial Aid Advisory Committee.

The policy is designed to curtail student abuse of the loans and help meet an increased demand for them.

"Emergency loans help a lot of students, but available funds aren't sufficient and that is the reason we had to tighten up," said Michael Novak, director of Aids, Awards and Veterans services. "If we had more money, then we wouldn't have to worry about these restrictions."

EMERGENCY loans to full-time students during registration will not exceed two-thirds of the cost of tuition and fees. Part-time students may not borrow more than half those costs. Formerly, full-time students were able to borrow the full amount of their fees.

The repayment period for loans has been reduced from 90 days to 45 days and the annual interest rate has doubled from 4 per cent to 8 per cent. Loans will not be extended and delinquent loans will be assessed a finance charge of 18 per cent a year, Novak said.

He said the policy change should go into effect May 23 for summer school, but it may be delayed until June if the new contracts aren't ready.

THERE probably will be an increased need for emergency loans because of increased costs in fees and tuition and because of a change in Veterans Administration policy which will delay payments for veterans at the first of each semester, Novak said.

"With the higher fees, there is going to be a higher demand," said Brad Malone, student member of the Financial Aid Advisory Committee.

"The proposal is designed to spread out the available money over more people and bring it back sooner so we can loan it back out," Novak said.

Cows lack privacy as ag students watch on

Some K-State agriculture students are getting an inside look at cows.

Ten cows at the K-State dairy barns have a stopper in their sides which is helping to improve feeding techniques and prevent disease, according to Erle Bartley, professor of dairy science.

The plug is covering an incision that leads to the animals' rumen, the first stomach of a four-stomach digestive system. When the plug is removed it is possible to look into the animals' stomach. The incision is called a fistula, which means "an abnormal opening in the skin."

THE MAIN reason for the opening is to collect samples from the stomach, said Brain McKee, junior in dairy production. This helps determine the digestibility and protein synthesis of feed in the stomach.

"This is important, for the rumen is the most important part of digestive breakdown because of the presence of bacteria," McKee said. "This is the reason cattle can digest roughage like hay."

"Fistulation started about 27 years ago when I first came to K-State," Bartley said. "It has enabled us to study the contents in the rumen, where many times disease will start."

MOLLY, a research cow, died last year after 14 years of research had been done with her. She helped seven students complete their graduate and doctorate work during those years.

"The research is expensive, so only one cow is usually used," Bartley said. "It sometimes takes two or three years to complete these detailed studies."

Molly died of natural causes, though some research animals are lost.

Student teachers to stay on campus

By JOCELYN SHEETS
Collegian Reporter

Change comes everyday and change in policy and outlook has come to K-State's Department of Family and Child Development (FCD). Students will have to do their regular student teaching on campus in the University's day care center starting next fall.

Marjorie Stith, head of FCD, said students will no longer have to travel to Topeka or Kansas City to do their student teaching.

THE TRAVELING, to some students, was a hardship because it was necessary for students to have all their classes on one day and teach on the other days, Stith said. With the new program the department is spreading out the students' other classes throughout the week, she said.

"We've been thinking of ways to eliminate the traveling for a long time," Stith said.

"I feel the new center will be a good learning experience but I was disappointed because I was hoping to work in a special education situation," said Gay McClure, senior in early childhood education.

Stith said K-State will have a full day care service next fall. The department is providing students with teaching on campus so they may have better use of the library, cut down on traveling, won't have a marathon of classes on one day and to give them a choice of better housing, Stith said.

"For the past three years, I've had expectations of getting to do my student teaching in a setting with handicapped children," said Darcy Frye, junior in early childhood education. "Prior students have had this opportunity of working in a variety of situations and since this is no longer true for next year's student teachers, I am just trying to adjust to this change."

"I personally would like to work with handicapped pre-schoolers and can specialize when I get my masters," Frye said. "So I'm making adjustments and wish the best for the program."

STITH said the department will continue to keep in touch with other centers such as those for disabled children so students may work in the centers in addition to their regular student teaching.

"This will give students, wishing to work in this kind of situation, teaching in addition to their regular student teaching," Stith said. "And other students in other areas will have the opportunity to have additional experiences in other centers."

"I don't like the idea of going to classes four days a week and teaching five mornings a week," said Ruth Kamps, senior in early childhood education. "There's no big block of time so you can do your planning."

Any change such as this one, when it is made and not shared with the students as early as possible, is bound to cause problems for some, Stith said.

"If we find it doesn't work out we'll try something different the next year," Stith said. "I feel it will be a good thing for students and other people involved."

Degree candidates reach record high

K-State will set a record this spring for the number of degrees conferred in one year.

There are 2,459 degree-candidates, bringing the potential total to 4,043. That figure includes 1,584 who have already received degrees since the May 1976 graduation.

There will be two exercises this year because of the size of the graduating class, said Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

Master's, doctor of philosophy and doctor of veterinary medicine degrees will be conferred in exercises at 3 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

The public is invited to attend both exercises. K-State President Duane Acker will confer the degrees and present his "Charge to the Class." There will be no commencement speaker.

For years, objects of great value have been accumulating in the closets, drawers, basements and bookshelves of Manhattan. Ignored, despised, and long unused, these items could be worth tens of thousands, if only their owners were alert enough to bring them to market!

We're talking about books. Virtually every student has lots of 'em. Of course, almost everybody brings some of their books to the Union to sell every semester. But, a good many more never get to us, because they are forgotten or mislaid.

So, before you make your trip up to the Union to sell your books, go on a treasure hunt. Check all those nooks and crannies, pile up your discoveries, and cash in. Even books which were discontinued last year could be on the list again. You'll never know until you try.

Free universities may be charging

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Collegian Reporter

The original intent of the free university of the tumultuous '60s may have died, but the concept is alive and well and living in Boulder, New York, Manhattan.

Free universities grew out of the angry dissatisfaction of the 60s and matured in the leisure hours of the early 70s. It has been hypothesized they will flounder in today's tight economy and employment situation.

Sue Maes, director of University for Man (UFM) at K-State, said she believes people need a mechanism for getting in touch with each other. That's where the free university fits in, she said.

Dennis Dube, director for the Community Free School in Boulder, Co., also thinks the free university will survive. A larger body of the American public realizes they need skills practical and useful in everyday life, Dube said.

"PEOPLES' concepts have been going through changes, and change is the watchword of the free university," Dube said. "We're getting better, stronger and more independent as we grow."

"There is a sudden interest in courses featuring business skills, while arts and crafts are slipping," Dube said. "Sports and recreation are just as popular, but there is more of an emphasis on practical skills."

Myles Horton, director of the Highlander Free School in Tennessee said he can see the lack of employment opportunities affecting the future of the free school.

"There will always be people who need that piece of paper to get a job, but there will also be the people who want to get an education while they are getting it," Horton said.

"The emphasis on certification has downgraded academic education. It hurts both alternative and traditional education."

Bill Draves, K-State instructor of continuing education, said there is more of an emphasis on serious study and free universities do not compete with campus courses.

"Free universities grew out of a negative response towards college courses, but now it's a positive thing."

"The biggest problems faced by the movement are organization, training for administration and providing substantial salaries for staff," he said. "An overemphasis on getting a job could hurt free universities, but most people who come already have jobs."

THE FREE university is surviving, but some say it doesn't actually cater to the needs of the people, as originally intended.

Horton said he believes it depends on the school.

There are two types of free universities—those really concerned with developing alternative education and those which have latched onto traditional methods and applied them to teaching non-academic subject matter, Horton said.

The "alternative" in alternative education is sometimes sacrificed because the free universities are tied to traditional funding agencies and must conform to their desires, Horton said.

Horton encountered K-State's UFM at a national conference in Louisville, Ky., last semester and said it is "one of the better ones," although it is not independent from university funding.

SOME OF UFM's funds are allocated to them by SGA.

"When you're going to be funded by any organization, you have to justify your requests and live up to their expectations," said Ann Swegle, UFM staff member. "SGA has generally been very supportive of UFM."

Of the $18,066 UFM requested from SGA this year, $400 for travel was cut.

Funding is constantly a problem, said Dave Ayers, UFM staff member. He added continuation of leadership is also a problem.

"If there is constantly a turnover in leadership, there is no continuity," Ayers said.

Other free universities also face funding problems.

"We are constantly applying for grants and benefits—the free school needs to be independent, and if cut back to the bare bones, it has to survive," Dube said of his Boulder institution.

ROBERT Adcock, director and staff of the Louisville Free University (LFU) in Kentucky, said LFU is now funded by the University of Kentucky's student governing association but is trying to become independent of student fees.

He said the major problem is a lack of interest from the student senators and no student response to classes.

"People in Kentucky don't know what it is, they have never had any exposure to any revolutionary activity," Adcock said. "There is a built-in safety valve in this culture to avoid these things."

Although things are off to a slow start in Louisville, Adcock said he doesn't think free universities will die from a lack of clientele.

"It all depends on the outlook of the people," Adcock said. "The word alternative is an important aspect of the education free universities should provide. People want to get away from the assembly line, impersonal education of the traditional university."

"The 70s spawned a new philosophy on life—people saw the problems of society in general, and world-wide problems."

"The people are still out there, but they have become more traditional and conservative and less vocal. The subculture of the 60s is also still here, and they need alternatives," Adcock said.

"When more traditional people can get together with people with the concept of the free university in their minds, it will propagate the idea that education is a life-long process and will grow along the lines of alternative education," he said.

Kissinger fought bureaucracy threatened to quit, Nixon says

Without having to deal with the tensions of Watergate, which forced him to resign in 1974, Nixon sketched with considerable detail his impressions of Henry Kissinger, his principal foreign policy adviser, Chairman Mao Tse-tung of China and Soviet leaders Nikita Khrushchev and Leonid Brezhnev.

NIXON said Kissinger "couldn't stand the bureaucratic infighting" and that Kissinger feuded with William Rogers, who he finally succeeded as secretary of state in 1973.

Nixon said Kissinger had suggested "maybe a half-dozen times" that perhaps he, Kissinger, ought to quit.

Kissinger advised Nixon it might be politically dangerous to send more than limited military support to Israel during the 1973 war but Nixon gave the order: "Send everything that flies."

Mao Tse-tung, despite complications of at least a partial stroke and having to converse almost entirely in monosyllables, "was in charge of himself and he was in charge of China" until his death in 1976.

A tough and ruthless leader, Mao lived simply and was aided by "rather pretty Chinese girls" who lifted him up and helped him walk.

Khrushchev, the late Soviet leader who steered his country away from the harsh regime of Josef Stalin, was both boorish and brilliant, with "a terrible inferiority complex."

By contrast, Brezhnev, his successor and current head of the Kremlin hierarchy, is not so quick but is "far better mannered" and "a much safer man to have sitting there with his finger on the (nuclear) bomb." Somewhat of a "fashion-plate," Nixon said Brezhnev likes beautiful cars and beautiful women.

THE MOVE to seek an accommodation with China after nearly a quarter-century of hostility was his own, Nixon said, and not Kissinger's.

"I conceived it before I ever met him and I pushed it very hard from the first days of the administration," the former president said.

Nixon said he could foresee neither a rapprochement between China and the Soviet Union nor a Chinese attack on Taiwan.

Skyrocketing bills: Pain to patients

By KRIS TILSON
Collegian Reporter

There was a time when doctors gave their patients a bullet to bite on to ease the pain in surgery. Today, however, bullets might better be furnished to ease the pain of the medical bill.

In the last 10 years, hospital costs have risen 180 per cent and physicians' charges have increased 77 per cent. Hospital costs are expected to increase 18 per cent and doctor costs 12 per cent by next year.

U. S. government figures show hospital costs have risen 1,000 per cent since 1950—seven times the growth rate of the national economy.

Insurance companies pay out about $433 million annually for health costs, an increase of $393 million since 1966. Area physicians and dentists attribute the increase to the cost of supplies.

INFLATION has caused dental supplies to triple in the last nine months, but dentist fees haven't risen, one office reported.

An administrator at the OB-GYN Associates Clinic said obstetrics care and delivery is close to $450 compared to $225 or $250 five years ago.

"I expect the cost of supplies has caused the increase," the administrator said. "I imagine that's what it is. Doctors in this vicinity are slow to raise their fees."

National statistics show an annual health care bill of $2,600 for a family of four or about 11 per cent of the average citizen's income.

Kansas hospital costs average $180 per day. The average hospital stay is seven days, totaling $1,200.

DAN BROYLES, chief executive officer at St. Mary Hospital, said his hospital averages 24,000 patients per year, averaging $145 per day for a semi-private room. The charge includes nursing, meals, depreciation on the building, malpractice insurance, utilities, labor and medicine.

Costs for surgery or baby delivery are extra.

In minor operations, the operating room rents for $75 per half hour.

These operations usually are relatively simple and require little time, he said.

For major surgery the room costs $175 for the first hour and $5 for each additional five minutes, he said. The cost of an operation depends on the number of doctors, nurses, technicians needed and the type of work being done.

"Whatever happens, the hospital needs to be prepared at all times," Broyles said. "Part of the cost of health care is stand by."

IN ADDITION to the $450 for obstetrics care and delivery, the hospital charges $450 to $550 for a birth depending on the amount of difficulty involved. The lesser figure applies if the baby is a girl, a normal presentation (not a breach birth), two to three hours in labor and no complications. Circumcisions cost $10 more.

Broyles said the average stay for patients under 65 is 6.2 days and people over 65 usually stay 11 to 12 days.

"Most usage of a hospital is acute. College students are usually in the hospital because of accidents," he said.

Roger Birnbaum, administrative assistant at Lafene Student Health Center, said five years ago students paid a use charge of $25 per semester. Students now pay $32 per semester.

He said the increase is because medical costs in all areas are rising. Labor and material are one of the fastest rising costs and have gone up 16 per cent in one year. The fee increase is to "try to stay ahead of inflation," he said.

THE LAFENE PHARMACY tries to sell drugs at cost plus 30 per cent. There is no charge for physicians, he said, and the charges for laboratory and x-rays are "a bargain."

The Lafene hospital charges $25 per day because it, like other Lafene services, is supplemented by the student health fee.

Tom Faulkner, administrator at Memorial Hospital, agreed with the others on the reasons for rising medical costs.

"It's sort of a collective thing," he said. "Food, labor, energy and malpractice insurance has gone up. Nothing's gone down. It leaves hospitals with no alternative."

"Our malpractice insurance was up 300 per cent last year over the previous year," Faulkner said. "Our utility bill was up 37 per cent. Those are costs over which we have no control and the only way to offset them is through increases in our charging structure."

Another factor affecting costs besides inflation is the cost of equipment. New medical advances make diagnostic and treatment methods more effective, but they are expensive and require highly trained people to operate them.

LABOR, is another factor.

"We are looking at no less than a 20-cent-an-hour increase in our minimum wage July 1, and even for our small hospital this will mean an extra $85,000 a year in payroll," Faulkner said. "To meet this we will have to increase our room rate by about $6 per day."

Memorial Hospital charges $66 a day for a semi-private room. This includes nursing, food and housekeeping, but it does not include medication.

Inefficient use of equipment leads to increases also. The federal government is urging hospitals to share services and purchases of equipment. Shared purchasing is in effect in Manhattan, and the consolidation proposal of placing emergency care at St. Mary and obstetrics at Memorial would be an example of shared services.

Defensive medicine is now practiced by doctors to avoid malpractice suits. It involves running extra tests to be certain no serious condition is overlooked. It also costs more.

Federal and state legislation has stimulated both the supply and demand for medical care by financing increased expansion for hospital facilities. Extra beds that lie empty cost 60 per cent more to maintain than a full bed.

RURAL communities short of doctors which build new hospitals to attract physicians adds to this problem also.

President Jimmy Carter has proposed a "transitional hospital cost containment program" that would put a 9 to 10 per cent ceiling on hospital costs for the next fiscal year.

Both Royles and Faulkner said that such a ceiling without exceptions for the uncontrollable expenses they mentioned would harm hospitals.

"If exceptions to this requirement are not adequate, you will have hospitals going bankrupt or mass reductions in personnel and diminished quality of health care," Faulkner said.

Even the shared services and shared purchasing costs would rise above the nine per cent level they said.

"What we would really do is end up looking at our marginal departments, the ones which don't make money for us, and cutting them out," Broyles said. "For instance, occupational therapy for family services, both of which are essentially provided free by the hospital. We'd have to knock those out."

Policewoman's mail causes problems

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, Ohio (AP)—After five months on the job, Sheriff Kathy Crumbley has solved her first murder case and proven she can keep the peace during a wildcat coal strike.

THE ONLY thing that has her stymied at the moment is her fan mail.

"You just wouldn't believe how much mail I've had," the Belmont County sheriff said, gesturing toward a bulging sack. "They've come from all over the country and from 17 foreign nations."

The 31-year-old strawberry blonde said mail began pouring in after her election received international attention last winter.

Sheriff Crumbley, a robust six-footer, also won some local fans recently when 16,000 miners walked off their jobs in this eastern Ohio county, where she is the top law enforcement officer.

"We had a little trouble early in the strike," she recalled, strapping on her .38-caliber revolver as she talked. "The next day I attended a miners' rally at the ballfield over in Bellaire. There were about 300 men there and I told them I would hate to arrest any of them, especially since I was the granddaughter, daughter, niece and wife of a coal miner."

"They gave me a big hand and promised they'd lay off Belmont County and, by golly, they kept their work."

"You know," she added with a smile, "my husband wasn't at that rally. Somebody asked me where he was and I said, 'He's one coal miner who's home baby sitting and that's where you belong.' Later, one of the miners came up and told me I was the first sheriff who had ever treated the coal miners like human beings."

THIS PAST winter, the body of a hitchhiker was found on Interstate 79. It turned out the dead man had been picked up and killed by two men who confessed to the crime after they were sentenced to life in prison in another case in Tennessee.

The case fell together after Sheriff Crumbley circulated a flyer with the hitchhiker's identity which was seen by authorities in Tennessee and Pennsylvania.

She said she hasn't had much trouble with her staff of 17.

"When people ask my men how they like working for a woman, they tell them they're working 'for the people and with the woman.' I like that."

SHE SAID her husband has been very understanding too, especially about her erratic hours and night calls. She also keeps a hectic pace of speaking appearances.

Committee begins probe of security, traffic office

By VELINA HOUSTON
News Editor

The K-State administration is investigating allegations that some security and traffic control officers have conducted themselves in an unprofessional manner.

The investigation was launched as a result of charges made by an employee of the office, said Paul Young, vice president for university development.

A resource who asked not to be identified said the employee who made the charges was an officer being disciplined for sleeping on duty. Young declines to confirm this.

"This situation is a matter involving personnel relations and arises out of personnel problems," Young said. "As a consequence, there are a great many things I can't and won't say."

"I would rather not reveal the names of the members of the fact-finding committee at this point. It consists of three people not from the Physical Plant—two are unclassified staff and one is classified. None are students," he said.

THE COMMITTEE members are not affiliated with the security force in order to assure greater objectivity and efficiency in the gathering and handling of facts, Young said.

A preliminary report is expected by next week with a final report due in two weeks.

"Security persons are law enforcement officials concerned with public and personal safety, protection of state's property, enforcement of the laws of the state of Kansas and, by statute, charged with administering the regulations of the Kansas Board of Regents and the University," Young said.

"We expect the officers to carry out these functions in the best traditions of law enforcement with a high level of professional conduct, especially in this area."

"Your rights and my rights are in question just by the way they act," Young said. "I don't want to stress this to the point of expecting them to be angels, but everyone comes into contact with them and they have to appear professional at all times."

WHEN ALLEGATIONS of any kind arise that cast doubt on the way in which security officers are performing their duties, Young said, the University has the responsibility to find out facts, clear the innocent and identify the guilty.

He said the "unprofessional conduct" involved a specific activity in which several officers have been said to have participated on occasion.

"In light of public reaction to the rape (in the Athletic Dorm), these allegations have to be cleared up so there is no doubt as to the quality of protection on campus," he said.

Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider has ruled Student Senate is not subject to the Kansas open meetings law.

The decision announced last Tuesday, refers to the question of whether Student Senate's secret ballot election of Chairperson Cindy Thomas last February was legal under state law.

The statute, known as the Sunshine law, says "Transactions by legislative or administrative bodies of the state...supported in whole or in part by public funds" cannot take "binding action" by secret ballot.

SCHNEIDER RULED Student Senate has no legislative power in the state and acts only in an advisory capacity.

"President Acker has veto power over Senate legislation," Thomas said. She could recall only one instance where the president of the University exercised that authority. Former university president James McCain rejected a senate decision to have the student union built at Tuttle Creek.

"Technically, we don't have power," Thomas said, "but, in practice, we do."

SECTION 104 of the K-State Student Government Association (SGA) constitution says, "It is recognized that the president of the University is responsible to the Board of Regents for all phases of the University administration and that the authority of student personnel policies emanates from him-her."

Last March, University Attorney Richard Seaton said the open meetings law was applicable to Student Senate because Senate is funded by state monies.

Student Attorney Nyles Davis questioned whether the student activity fee, which Senate distributes and uses, is state funds.

"I thought that the student activity fee was separate, in the state's custodial care, rather than actual state funds," Davis said.

When Senate chose to elect its vice-chairperson by secret ballot, senators could have been prosecuted on the basis that they participated knowingly, which is one requirement for prosecution for violation of the sunshine law.

Senators could have faced a sentence of up to 30 days in jail and a small fine.

A-dorm rechristened: undergoes renovation

By VELINA HOUSTON
News Editor

The Athletic Dormitory, with its physical disabilities and negative stereotypes, is a thing of the past. The A-Dorm, undergoing renovation, has been rechristened Edwards Hall after A. Thornton Edwards, a retired associate professor of psychology and former housing director.

"It will be more expensive to live in Edwards Hall as compared to other residence halls," said Tom Frith, director of housing.

"This is because we can assure parking spaces, a swimming pool, rooms with individual lavatories and larger, more lavish recreation areas at Edwards."

THE LARGE recreation areas are furnished with weight machines, pool tables and televisions, he said. The rooms are also larger than those in other halls.

Edwards Hall will open this fall and Frith said he hopes it will run similar to the other halls in the K-State Association of Residence Halls (KSUARH).

Athletes will continue to be housed in the building next fall. The occupancy limit is 212, 20 more than before renovation, Frith said. The remaining spaces will be open to any K-State student wishing to rent.

NON-ATHLETES may have a two-student room for $1,500 per year or a three-student room for $1,475," he said. "In the other residence halls, the cost is $1,200."

"Some non-athletes have requested to live in Edwards," he said. "When housing gets tighter, other people will begin seriously considering it as a residence."

The Department of Housing is starting to correspond with and interview people for the position of full-time dorm director at Edwards. Eight resident assistants, most of whom have lived or worked in other dorms, have been selected for the new dorm.

"Edwards will still be a men's hall," Frith said. "We hope that next year it will be coed with a wing or two of women. Women, especially women athletes, are not in favor of any services availed to men only."

FOOD SERVICE will be maintained in the dorm and operated like the cafeterias in other dorms with meal tickets. The residents will decide on visitation, cereal malt beverage intake and other integral policies, Frith said.

"They (residence assistants) have started to get a hall government organized because in order to have social and educational funds, the hall must have a responsible government," he said.

"The problem I foresee is convincing people in the hall that they have a voice in how the hall is run and control of their own destinies in the hall."

FRITH ESTIMATED $400,000 worth of renovations are needed in order to do "everything that has to be done" to turn the old A-Dorm into respectable living quarters.

"It will take more than a year to do it," Frith said. "Little things will be worked on during the year and we hope to finish it up next summer."

The athletes are now being housed in Ford Hall. Any students wishing to live in a dorm during summer session also will be housed there.

Nixon's claim defies logic

While trying to justify the actions his administration took against the political dissidents of the late 1960s and early 1970s, Richard Nixon claimed the President had a right to operate outside the law.

Nixon later clarified this statement, which he made to David Frost during an interview, saying that the President is not above the law, but has the right to go outside the law in cases of national emergency.

THESE STATEMENTS shocked many people, others shrugged and considered them well within Nixon's conservative character.

Surprisingly, Nixon does seem to have precedents for his statement. Abraham Lincoln believed that acts which seem unconstitutional are justifiable if they are taken to protect the Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson stated that any lengths could be taken by the President to preserve our inherent rights.

Many persons still believe Franklin Roosevelt exceeded the powers of the Presidency during World War II.

MANY MAY still believe the country was faced with a dire internal crisis during Nixon's administration, but many more will continue to view the volatile time as a period of reaching out, of testing our growth as a nation.

The period was not one of national emergency, but an expansion of the political awareness and participation of the nation's individuals.

THE CONSTITUTION was not subverted, but tested. And it survived. The country survived.

Nixon overstepped the law with his actions. Only a tyrannical government would view times of change as chaos. Nixon tried to operate our government as a one-man ruler.

Nixon may feel he has precedents for the rationalizations of his actions, but he lacks the logic which would make his rationalizations valid.

'Just very close friends'

Maybe I'm old-fashioned or maybe this is a new fashion of thinking, but I have always believed a male and female can carry on a platonic relationship.

I find it increasingly difficult, however, to either establish such a relationship anymore, or after doing so, to convince peers and family that a man and I are just "very close friends."

When you're free, single and a self-declared unavailable trying to establish a cross-sex friendship, you run into three types of all-American males.

One is the kind with whom you can't even carry on a decent conversation. Two minutes after meeting him, he is asking you the Ultra-Brite question, your phone number and swimming suit size.

YOU MAY be disgustingly lucky enough to run into one of those real hustlers who think it is the question of the year when they ask, "What sign are you?"

This type believes that in order for a man and a woman to be emotionally and spiritually close, they must also be physically close. Ask them to spell it out and it always comes out S-E-X. I re-translate it and return to sender spelled B-Y-E.

Then there is the type who thinks every red-blooded female is on the make. If you're a woman and you smile too much, look too long or just exercise common politeness, they'll swear on a stack of Bibles that you're out to get them.

This type usually runs for the hills head first. I say let them run and give them a kick to help them along.

IF HE does stick around and a friendship evolves, it's generally superficial. He is cautious because he thinks you want his body and you go around mad as hell because he has the egotistical audacity to think so.

To these men I say: give the ladies a break. Albeit, some women are out to get a man, but many of us are just window shopping with no intention or desire to buy.

Let's face the music. If you are a female who believes men and women can be confidantes and carry on relationships void of sex, have fun convincing everyone.

Or, if you have the balls or (if you prefer) courage to do so, just forget about convincing anyone. Either way, the insinuations and assumptions will flood your ears.

FRIENDS and family rarely provide an escape outlet.

"Who is that nice boy you've been seeing so often?" a mother might ask.

"Oh, just a friend," you reply.

With a gleam in her eye, she nods her head knowingly.

"Well, don't you two get too serious. You're 21, still young, dear." I gag at the thought.

CAN YOU imagine your mother telling you not to get too serious if the friend you spend so much time with is a Denise, Julie or Diane? Or, there is the other familiar line:

"Dear, don't you think you have too many boyfriends? What will the neighbors think?"

The question never even comes to mind if all your friends are female.

Peers usually don't come right out and ask you stupid questions about your male-female relationships. They just assume you and a man may be the best of friends, but that you're probably bedfellows (bedpersons?), too.

If you go out to lunch with a man, you're dating. See him more than three times and you're lovers. See more than one man more than three times and you're a loose woman.

MAYBE it's the good old double standard or just human thought. A man wants more or thinks you want more and people label even a distant cross-sex friendship as "something more."

I have the right to have close friends who are males. I don't care if they look like Al Pacino or Idi Amin, if I say they are just friends, that is exactly what I mean.

The sexual question doesn't arise concerning female friendships and it shouldn't arise with male-female friendships either.

Like I said, maybe it's a new fashion of thinking, but I believe men and women can be just friends, no strings or sexual innuendos attached.

KUWAIT (AP)—A Middle East Airlines jet with 113 persons aboard was hijacked Sunday and forced to land in this Arab sheikdom. A Kuwait informational ministry official said the hijacker agreed to surrender after being offered safe passage out of the county.

The official, Abdul Aziz Jaafar, invited Kuwait journalists to the airport to witness the surrender. The agreement came six hours after the Boeing 707 jetliner landed at Kuwait International Airport. It was hijacked while en route from Beirut, Lebanon, to Baghdad, Iraq.

ASSEN, The Netherlands (AP)—South Moluccan terrorists Sunday released two women—one of them pregnant—from a hijacked train where some 55 Dutch hostages have been held hostage nearly two weeks.

A hospital spokesman in Groningen, where the women were taken, said both "are looking very well, both physically and psychologically."

CHICAGO (AP)—Shooting between members of rival Puerto Rican street gangs at a park celebration apparently touched off a night of fighting, looting and burning which left two persons dead, 70 injured and 119 in custody, police said Sunday.

At the height of the disturbance, thousands of rock-and-beer can-throwing demonstrators, many of them demanding Puerto Rican independence from the United States, forced about 200 policemen to withdraw for reinforcements and prevented fire trucks from reaching a burning three-story building.

Club-swinging officers backed by mounted police finally restored calm around midnight.

Grilling enhances summer eating

By DEB WILLIAMS
Collegian Reporter

The warm weather is leading many people from the stove and traditional dining room dinners to the barbecue grill and backyard picnics.

Del Allen, associate professor of animal science and industry and coach of the K-State meats judging team, has a few hints on charcoal grilling.

Anything from ground beef to steak can be cooked over charcoal, according to Allen. Not only beef cuts, but also pork chops, ham, spare ribs, lamb chops and leg of lamb can be cooked on a grill.

The cuts of meat or meat products that will produce best results when charcoal-grilled are those that are normally prepared by dry heat cooking.

"Dry heat cooking is when the heat is transmitted by radiation through the air. The product does not come in direct contact with the heat," Allen said.

CHARCOAL GRILLING is a form of dry heat cooking. All chops or steaks from the loin and rib region of the animal are good cuts for charcoal cooking, he said. Some of the cuts not recommended for grilling are from the leg or shoulder regions, especially in beef.

These cuts have more connective tissue which needs to be broken down by moist heat cooking, Allen said. Exceptions to this are leg of lamb and ham, which barbecue well.

The size of the cuts also is important.

"You will not get good results if the meat is less than one inch thick," Allen said. "One inch to one-and-one-quarter inch thickness is recommended.

"If the cut is too thin, the meat will dry out and lose its tenderness. Overly thick cuts take longer to cook and, because many people use too hot a fire, the outside may be burned while the inside is raw," Allen said.

Cooking time depends on how far the meat is above the coals. Allen recommends starting with the grill six to eight inches above the fire.

IF THE MEAT is too close to the coals, flare-ups or small fires may occur which will sear the meat. These fires can be controlled by a small squirt gun or dish soap bottle filled with water.

Cooking time for a rare steak at this height above the fire is about seven minutes per side. Medium rare takes about 10 minutes per side and medium to well-done takes 14 minutes per side.

"To reduce the cooking loss of the meat, never season the meat before grilling," Allen said.

"Salt breaks down the muscle cells in the meat and causes greater cooking loss.

"For the best results, cook the meat completely on one side and then turn and cook on the other side, turning the meat only once."

SOME ROASTS from the shoulder or hind regions can be barbecued with some success by using a marinade or sauce. Marinades, which usually contain some citric juices, act as a tenderizer, add juiciness and alter the flavor of the meat.

A meat thermometer also is necessary to barbecue a roast properly. For a rare roast, the inside temperature should be 140 to 145 degrees Fahrenheit; for medium rare, 145 to 150 degrees; for medium well, 155 to 160, and for well done, anything above 160 degrees.

A rotisserie is used often with roasts. This takes longer and requires more charcoal.

If sauces are used, the meat should be basted during the cooking, Allen said. Ribs cooked on the grill alone tend to be tough and dry.

Spare ribs must be pre-cooked under moist heat before they are grilled, adding a smoked flavor to the ribs.

ALTHOUGH MANY believe that pork must be cooked to well-done for safety reasons, this is not necessarily true, Allen said.

"137 degrees will kill the trichinosis bacteria, with 150 to 155 degrees allowing an adequate safety margin," he said. "A big mistake that many people make is to go out and buy a chuck steak or round steak, grill it like a T-bone or sirloin, and expect the same results."

Another mistake is trying to start cooking too soon, before the fire is ready.

Closed grills offer an advantage in that they can be closed tightly and allow the coals to go out and be reused. They also enclose the smoke around the meat which adds flavor.

There are several different types of charcoal, the best being hardwood. Hickory is the hardwood preferred, Allen said. He warned that charcoal should never be used in a closed area as it expels carbon dioxide gas and could cause suffocation.

Jet's future relies on funds

BY RANDY MERTENS
Staff Writer

Manhattan is in a race between obtaining necessary funds for improving airport facilities and Frontier's implementation of an all-jet fleet.

If the needed federal funding for airport improvements arrives first, Manhattan's airport service will continue and jet service will begin. If Frontier becomes an all-jet airline first, Manhattan will be removed from Frontier's routing.

"I don't know if we are going to get into a time problem," said Brent Kitchen, Manhattan airport manager.

"Funding delays would stop some of the improvements and if Frontier converts to an all-jet fleet before we finish, they can't bring the jets in," he said. "Then, we'll lose our only air carrier service."

THE city commission voted Jan. 25 to commit $571,000 in city funds in hopes of snaring $5.1 million in federal matching grant money from the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA).

Another problem facing airport improvements, Kitchen said, is the lack of time. The percentage of federal grant money for airport improvements allocated after Oct. 1, 1978 will be reduced, doubling the city's share of improvement costs.

This could make local funding more difficult to obtain, Kitchen said.

MARVIN Fisher, head planner for the FAA's central region, said the city would not receive the full amount at one time.

"We're juggling funds right now," Fisher said. "We can't confirm how much money is available to Manhattan. The funds are in doubt because the OMB (Office of Management and Budget) and Congress have changed the rules concerning allotments. These rules will change again in fiscal year 1979."

"We hope Manhattan will get enough to begin initial construction and then complete the project as allocations come in during each fiscal year," he said.

A FRONTIER spokesman said the airline plans to operate the propeller Convair 580, now using Manhattan's runways, for another five to 10 years—a timetable discounted by other sources.

Fisher, whose office has been working with the airline in its transition to jets, estimates the transition will take only five years.

A Frontier pilot said the Convairs could be up for sale "at the beginning of the year," if more airports on the Frontier route system become jet capable.

Frontier is eager to replace the Convairs, another pilot said, because the operating costs on the aircraft are continually rising. Some normal maintenance requires hand made parts because replacements are unavailable, he said.

KITCHEN said it is unlikely Frontier would retain Convair service to one or two cities not jet capable, if all other cities on its routes are jet capable.

Manhattan, he said, would be particularly vulnerable because of Frontier's existing jet service into Topeka and Salina.

The airline wants to bring jet service to Manhattan, Kitchen said and it is willing to sign a commitment for increased landing fees and rent on additional easements required for jet service.

The question, he said, is whether the improvements will be ready for the jets.

Young blasts Nixon, Ford for misunderstanding blacks

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young says in an interview in Playboy magazine that former Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford are "racists" who have "no understanding of the problems of colored people anywhere."

Young is quoted in the magazine's July issue as saying that everyone in the U.S. is inevitably tainted to some degree by racism and that his goal is to bring the issues of "ethnocentrism" out in the open and strip it of its "moral stigma."

Former Presidents Nixon and Ford "did not face racism in their lives and tended to rule it out," Young said. "Nixon and Ford did not face it because they were, in fact, racists."

ASKED by Playboy's senior article editor Peter Range whether that charge might be too strong, Young said the former presidents "were racists not in the aggressive sense but in that they had no understanding of the problems of colored people anywhere."

Young, a former civil rights worker, said the "big weakness," of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger was his failure to understand that "racism is one of the most powerful dynamics in the world today."

Speaking of Kissinger's experience as a Jewish refugee from Nazi Germany, Young said, "I think the horrors of racism in Kissinger's childhood were so terrible that in order to function, he had to put it behind him. Otherwise, he would have been so bitter and filled with hate he never could have done anything."

DESPITE criticism over remarks that the Cubans are a "stabilizing force" in Angola, that Britain "almost invented racism," Young said President Carter has encouraged him to go on speaking out on foreign policy issues.

Although he mentioned no names, the ambassador said this candor was misunderstood by reporters because there were "a lot of Cold Warriors in the press...They read one another's writing and very seldom do they really get out and become exposed to trends in American thinking."

Two charged in alleged gang-rape

One K-State football player was bound over for trial on a charge of rape and another has been arrested and charged in connection with an alleged gang-rape incident at the athletic dormitory March 30.

Jerome Holiwell, a freshman running back from Manhattan, was bound over for trial after his preliminary hearing June 1.

During testimony at the hearing, the rape victim named Roy Shine, a former defensive tackle, as one of the men participating in the incident.

Shine, a junior from Lynwood, Calif., was arraigned on June 3 and his preliminary hearing is scheduled for June 13.

Holiwell's arraignment will begin June 27.

Arts in the Park provides free summer entertainment

By SUSAN BURDEN
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan's "Arts in the Park" is the Midwest's only open air theater operating full-time during the summer.

Six evenings a week, from June 1 to Aug. 29, the Manhattan Recreation Commission presents a variety of musical and dramatic performances, ranging from jazz to barbershop music, and from plays to movies.

"We audition and try to screen the shows so nobody will go sour on us," Pinky Busick, director of Arts in the Park, said. He begins booking shows early in January for the following summer.

THROUGH THE auditioning, Busick tries to pick shows that will appeal to everyone.

"We get large crowds in the summer, averaging around 1,000 people per show. We want to please everybody.

"We very rarely charge an entrance fee," Busick said, "and if we do it's often a donation or 'pass the hat-pay what you want' fee.

"Most of the Arts in the Parks programs are funded through grants by the American Federation of Musicians and the National Endowment for the Arts," he said.

The Arts in the Park program this summer includes the Free Street Theater of Chicago, a dance and musical group, and the national and international fiddling champions, Frenchie Burk and Sohji Tobauchi.

BUSICK SAID local shows are always big crowd pleasers. John Biggs, a local guitarist, and the First Christian Church's Livingword Choir will be giving concerts this summer.

UFM's brochure focuses on energy

"We can't continue to use energy at our present rate of consumption." That's the inspiration for the University for Man's (U.F.M.) summer brochure.

The brochure's theme is "Small is Beautiful," taken from E. F. Schumacher's book of the same name.

Old-fashioned picnics, belly dancing, canoeing, new games and installing an attic fan are just a few of the 200 classes UFM will offer this summer.

Registration for classes will be June 14 and 15, in the K-State Union from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., June 14, at the Manhattan Public Library from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. and at the UFM House, 615 Fairchild Terr., on June 14 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Summer UFM brochures are available in the Union, main campus halls, Aggieville and downtown stores and at UFM.

Also on the agenda is the Manhattan Children's Theater Company, which will perform "The Sound of Music" at the end of July.

"Any kid could try out for a part and get one," Busick said. "We believe in everybody participating in our productions."

This summer marks the fourth year of production for Arts in the Park. All the programs are held at the Arts in the Park stage in City Park.

Walton, Blazers take NBA championship

PORTLAND (AP) — The Portland Trail Blazers completed their stunning rise to the top of the pro basketball world Sunday by defeating the Philadelphia 76ers 109-107 behind another brilliant all-around performance by center Bill Walton.

It was the culmination of a remarkable season for the Blazers, born of expansion, nurtured through six losing years marked by bickering and frustration and never before in the playoffs.

Walton, who scored and rebounded in double figures in every game of the series, had 20

LaCock lifts KC over Baltimore

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Designated hitter Pete LaCock belted a two-run home run in the sixth inning and the Kansas City Royals went on to defeat Jim Palmer and the Baltimore Orioles 4-3 Sunday.

Kansas City starter Andy Hassler boosted his record to 2-1 though he needed relief help from Mark Littell and Larry Gura.

The Royals grabbed a 2-1 lead in their half of the first on George Brett's RBI double and Al Cowens' sacrifice fly, but the Orioles tied it on Rich Dauer's run-scoring single.

After LaCock's homer made it 4-2, Baltimore cut the deficit to a run when Al Bumbry singled in Dauer from second in the seventh.

K-State signs 6'8" Oklahoma forward

Last season one of the biggest problems K-State's basketball team had to overcome was its lack of size on the front line.

K-State was successful in signing three big men during the recently-completed recruiting season. Head coach Jack Hartman believes they should help prevent this problem from reoccurring in years to come.

The last of the three big men to sign was Kevin Ogle, a 6-8, 210-pound forward from Edmond, Okla. He joined Greg Prudhoe, a 6-11 center from Peoria, Ill., and Brent Murphy, a 6-7 forward from Clinton, Iowa, in the K-State camp.

OGLE AVERAGED 13 points and 18 rebounds per game for Edmond High School his senior year despite a nagging ankle injury and earned All-Oklahoma City and All Mid-State Conference honors. As a track performer, he leaped 6-8 to capture the Oklahoma Class 4-A high jump title a few weeks ago.

"Kevin represents the type of front-line player we need," Hartman said. "He possesses aggressive rebounding skills and a soft touch."

points, 22 rebounds, 7 assists and 8 blocked shots in Sunday's finale. He was named the Most Valuable Player of the championship series.

Bob Gross added 22 points and Lionel Hollins 20 for the Blazers to offset another remarkable effort by Philadelphia's Julius Erving, the game's high scorer with 40 points.

Sorcerers stress secrecy in magic course

By LISA SANDMEYER
Collegian Reporter

Abracadabra—the cabalistic charm is alive in Manhattan.

Dressed in a floor-length robe and matching cone-shaped hat, the sorcerer's apprentice hid a small spongy ball under a brass cup. When he lifted the cup, the ball was gone and a lemon had taken its place.

Cigam came dressed in a clown suit and white-face and turned a silk scarf into a chicken's egg.

In real life, the sorcerer's apprentice is Paul Venturella and he does his magic equally as well, whether in a T-shirt or a Merlin costume. Venturella is deputy for the Wizard of Oz Assembly No. 137, Manhattan's local chapter of the Society of American Magicians.

"Cigam" (magic spelled backwards) is Ken Garwick, president of the Wizard of Oz Assembly.

GARWICK AND Venturella teach a magic class for University for Man each semester. The class attracted 18 people, enough to form a local assembly. Seven members are needed to join the Society of American Magicians, the oldest magical society in the U.S.

Magicians come from all age groups and occupations, Garwick said. The oldest member of the Assembly is 82; the youngest is a sixth-grader. The membership also includes a dentist, two college professors and high school and college students.

"Garwick and Venturella stress two things in their class and assembly. The first is magic is entertainment and magicians shouldn't use their skills to put down their audience.

"We had a problem with one member who performed more to show off than to entertain," Garwick said. "Most adults, especially male adults, feel obligated to figure out how a trick is done, and a 'Ha, ha, I can do this and you can't' attitude can frustrate more than entertain."

SECRECY, a necessary part of magic, is stressed in the magicians' class and written in the Society of American Magicians' oath of membership. The oath reads, "I am opposed to needless and useless explanations of secrets to persons who are not entitled to know them or who are not interested in magic."

The society also is opposing the publications of books and magazines available to the general public that expose tricks, Garwick said.

People often offer explanations of how tricks are done or they ask magicians to show them.

"If I could do tricks the way people say I do, I'd be really good," Venturella said.

GARWICK'S STANDARD reply to secret-seekers is, "Can you keep a secret?" When they say yes, he tells them, "Well, so can I."

A shaving kit bag holds up to two hours of Garwick's close-up show. The bag contains coins that move around, a blank deck of cards that turns into a regular deck, a cup and disappearing ball and several scarves called "silks."

Venturella packs several close-up magic tricks in a knapsack. A feat for which he is well-known is the Cups and Balls trick where balls disappear, move around and change size under cups.

This trick is the oldest one on record. The Egyptian burial chamber of Beni Hassas (circa 3000 B.C.) shows a painting which Egyptologists translate as an early version of the Cups and Balls trick.

"Magic is making things appear, disappear and change places," Garwick said.

Magic really takes place in the spectators' minds," Venturella said. "We show you the way, and you trick yourself."

MAGICIANS' "PATTER" is a method used to show the way. While performing, Garwick talks to his audience, tells them what to expect, explains where he learned the trick and gives some history. Thus the spectators' ears are occupied while eyes try to find the secret of how the trick works.

Garwick and Venturella perform in the Manhattan area separately and with the Assembly. People often ask the magicians to do benefits, but paid work is hard to find.

In the seven years he has worked with magic, Garwick estimates that he has spent about $2,000 and received about $400 in paid performances.

Magicians prefer not to be called "psychic," Venturella said.

"People who call themselves 'psychic' are actually performing magic," Venturella said. "We don't claim powers. Magicians perform feats of magic."

Magicians are trained to find and see deception," Venturella said. "A magician usually knows what another magician is doing. The difference is in the style of performance."

Wheat harvest begins in southern counties

COMPILED FROM AP SOURCES

Combines have begun venturing into muddy fields in southern Kansas counties to harvest a winter wheat crop that is predicted to reach near-record proportions.

Although officials predicted Monday that it would be 7 to 10 days before the harvest is in full swing, enough of the wheat had ripened in the border counties to encourage the spotted harvesting activity.

Hot, drying winds over the weekend neutralized to some extent the soft, muddy conditions caused by recent heavy rains, said Mel Peters, coordinator of the state harvest placement office in Wellington.

THE STATE harvest control office also opened Monday in Great Bend, but director Jim Jay said his task of directing custom-cutting crews to work sites in the western two-thirds of the state would not begin in earnest for another week.

"We've had several custom crews come up from Oklahoma to work in Harper, Sumner and Barber counties," he said, "but most of them will come later."

State officials have predicted a 1977 harvest of 384 million bushels, just missing the record of 384.8 million bushels in 1973.

A DOZEN combines and trucks were reported needed in the Anthony area Monday as farmers began harvest operations.

"The wheat crop remains in good condition and continues to mature around the state," the Kansas Crop and Livestock reporting service said in its weekly summary of crop conditions.

Republicans demand apology

Young's racial comments draw fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter on Monday disagreed with Andrew Young's characterizations of former Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford as racists. But he rejected a Republican demand that the United Nations ambassador apologize or be fired.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell told reporters, "I don't think the President feels that those two gentlemen are racists, certainly not in the sense he would use the term."

POWELL TOLD reporters he believed Young, a one-time civil rights activist, was using racist in "the broader sense of the term." But he declined to provide Carter's definition of "racist."

Young said later Monday that by his own definition, "I'm racist."

The black ambassador called Carter's two predecessors "racists" in a Playboy magazine interview, which prompted the Republican call for an apology or his ouster. He also created a stir recently when he described Russians and Swedes as racists.

YOUNG, in an appearance on Capitol Hill, said he planned to meet with Carter on Tuesday to express his concern that some of those attacking his remarks now are beginning to attack the President as well.

"I want to assure him that I don't want to be handled like a friend," said Young. "I want to be treated as an ambassador. We can still be friends, regardless."

Asked about the meeting by reporters, Young said that he does not expect to be fired, but added that he does not consider himself invulnerable simply because he is one of the administration's top-ranking black officials.

IN MOSCOW, a Tass commentator said nobody in the United States takes Young very seriously and claimed that is why he is allowed "innocent pranks." But the Soviet commentator said some of Young's remarks are so outrageous that some rejoinder is called for.

Young described himself as racist during an appearance before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The ambassador was asked by Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., if he really meant to accuse Ford of racism.

"As I use the term, I'm racist, Senator," Young told Javits.

"I don't think you can be born in the 20th century and not be contaminated by the problem of race," he said. "And I think that it's racism that we all must struggle with. And the only thing that bothers me is when we're not struggling."

Young also told the Senate panel that while his use of the word "racist" has stirred controversy, he has not been able so far to find another word or phrase to describe "a history of oppression based on race."

K-State profs study human migration

By SUSAN BURDEN
Collegian Reporter

K-State professors of sociology, Jan and Cornelia Flora, are conducting research on why people move to and away from one-metropolitan areas of Kansas.

Hired and funded by the Ozark Regional Commission and the Kansas Department of Economic Development, the Floras are studying people's migration patterns in rural Kansas. The Floras' discoveries will help counties develop their resources to achieve the population they desire.

"We're studying ten counties, each representing the non-metropolitan counties of Kansas," Cornelia Flora said.

These counties are divided into four groups:

+Family farm counties with little hired help or capital investment.

+Capital intensive agricultural counties with little use of family labor and high use of machinery.

+Manufacturing counties with a variety of commercial opportunities and high employment.

+Service center counties with high employment in services such as government and education.

"We started our studies earlier in the year with Ellsworth County," Cornelia Flora said.

"Soon we'll be continuing with Washington County."

Surveys are done through questionnaires which request a person's migration history, including questions as to why a persons left an area and moved to another.

"WE RELY a lot on cooperation through the local extension services and the Kansas Farm Bureau," Cornelia Flora said.

"We have to prove to the county that we can benefit them."

The Floras have discovered that a far more complicated developmental package is needed.

"Jobs are important, but the cultural opportunities are equally important," Cornelia Flora said.

"Education, service opportunities, cultural aspects and various skills also offer reasons for moving."

Gasoline prices, high crime rates and high taxes also induce people to move to or from the state's rural areas.

The Floras research findings will be presented to their sponsors this winter.

Schneider files suit; cites Oklahoma firms

TOPEKA (AP)—The state of Kansas has taken legal action against two Oklahoma firms, requesting that they be banned from doing business in the state.

Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider announced Monday his office had filed suit against International Mail Order Co. and International Sewing Machine Co., both of Norman, Okla., along with Richard Smith and W. C. Adams, owners of the two firms.

The attorney general alleged the firms were violating the Kansas Consumer Protection Act in connection with the way they have solicited business.

Schneider said the firms have operated displays at county fairs throughout Kansas. Once the fair was completed, the firm distributes a sewing machine free of charge to a person whose name is drawn.

"Most or all of the other entrants receive a congratulatory letter advising them that they have been selected as a second prize winner and will receive a $200 discount check toward the purchase of a sewing machine," Schneider said in a statement released by his office.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a four-minute ceremony, with Watergate never mentioned, H.R. Haldeman and John Mitchell were ordered Monday to begin their appeal-delayed prison terms June 22.

Case no. 74-110, the Watergate coverup conspiracy prosecution, effectively came to an end as U.S. District Judge John Sirica signed the commitment order.

It has been two and one-half years since Haldeman's and Mitchell's conviction and the string of appeals had all but run out for the iron men of the Nixon administration.

"More than four years ago I started on a legal process I thought was proper," Haldeman said outside court. "I knew it was going to be difficult. I still think I was right. I am prepared now to accept the results."

Mitchell, 63, commented only on the crown of reporters and cameramen that jostled around him. "I hope nobody gets killed out of this," he said as he climbed into his car.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK. (AP) — Ann McDaniel, 21, became the nation's first blind long-distance switchboard operator Monday, Southwestern Bell officials said.

McDaniel works with a computer that connects with the switchboards and converts 82 buttons into 12-character Braille messages.

"Ann's proven that blind people can be long-distance operators — a job which has always been thought of as something only sighted people could possibly perform," said Bell spokesman Carl Woodyear.

TOPEKA (AP) — A plan to ease prison overcrowding in the state by remodeling classroom space at the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory was approved Monday by Gov. Robert Bennett.

Bennett said the remodeling will add space for 80 inmates easing overcrowding in "D" Cellhouse. The unit now has a population of 366.

Total cost of the project will be $28,000. It will be funded from savings and other areas of the reformatory budget, he said.

LONDON (AP) — Millions of loyal subjects and flag-waving tourists in jubilant spirits took to the streets of Britain on Monday to begin the celebration of Queen Elizabeth II's 25-year reign.

Today is Silver Jubilee Day, but thousands of well-wishers began milling about Monday in front of Buckingham Palace. A compact car pulled up to the gates sporting a sign that summed up the mood of the nation, "We love Liz."

Silver Jubilee Day is the biggest, most carefree celebration in Britain since Queen Elizabeth II was crowned in Westminster Abbey, and the country needed it.

LONDON (AP) — His Divine Holiness Shree Pramukh Swami Shastri Shree Narayan-swarupdasji arrived in London just as the celebration was starting of Queen Elizabeth II's 25 years on the throne. He says he hasn't seen a woman in 40 years and has no plans to try to see the queen.

"I became a swami at the age of 17 and immediately took on the code of celibacy," the religious leader said. "I am now 57 and have never seen a woman since that time."

The swami, who claims four million followers throughout the world, is in London to begin a world tour.

Local Forecast

Today is predicted to be clear to partly cloudy with a high of 80. Low tonight will be in the lower 60s. Wednesday it should warm up to 85.

Fighting subsides in Chicago streets

CHICAGO (AP) — After two steamy nights of fighting, burning and looting in a Hispanic neighborhood that complains of powerlessness, city and community leaders worked Monday to cool the tensions that had burst into violence over the weekend.

Police cruised along store-front-dotted West Division street but were keeping "a low profile," one officer said.

STREET SWEEPERS had cleaned broken glass, bottles, rocks and other debris. Some stores were open for business, but many more were not.

The trouble began Saturday at a Puerto Rican Day celebration in nearby Humboldt Park.

It started with a flare up between police and about 3,000 persons—most of them youths. By Monday, two men had been shot to death, at least 133 persons, including 57 policemen were injured and 154 arrested.

THE WINDOWS of numerous stores were smashed and their stocks of merchandise stolen. Several fires were started. Residents said the victimized stores, for the most part, were white-owned or operated.

Monday was the eve of a special mayoral election to pick a successor to the late Mayor Richard Daley, and representatives of the Puerto Rican community met with the favored candidate, acting Mayor Michael Bilandic, to air grievances.

Supreme Court upholds life

The Supreme Court Monday again considered the issue of the death penalty. In their 5-4 ruling, the Court decided that states cannot automatically decree the death penalty in cases involving the murder of a police officer.

The sentence of death, once in common usage for convicted murderers, is a volatile issue.

In 1973, the Supreme Court declared the overuse of the death penalty a form of "cruel and unusual punishment." In accordance with the ruling the states wiped the penalty off their books and relegated their gas chambers and electric chairs to mothballs.

BY 1976, 35 states had redrawn their death penalty statutes following the guidelines of the Supreme Court decision.

The trend toward the reinstatement of the death penalty is a frightening one.

It has been proven that the possibility of being put to death does not deter the potential murderer from committing his crime.

Rather, it would seem, violence breeds violence.

To deny a human his right to life is in every sense of the word, wrong.

THE ISSUE clouds because the person who has taken another life must be made to pay for his actions and, to some persons, the logical method of restitution is the denial of the murderer's right to life.

The reasoning used by advocates of the death penalty considers the individual as sub-human, a waste product of society. This kind of thinking is reminiscent of the Middle Ages.

Not all murderers belong to the dregs of humanity. Many can be and have been rehabilitated and reestablished in society.

IT IS hoped the Supreme Court's ruling will impede, preferably halt, the progress of the death penalty.

The penalty is outdated, a form of punishment which should be discarded.

Heroes or villains?

An eerie and unnerving social malady has invaded society and is growing like a cancer. Terrorism.

Terrorism in the form of taking hostages is becoming a common way for a group or individual to demand the attention of the world. Individual grudges or radical group demands are the motives for the capture of innocent bystanders and holding them for hours or days in perilous anguish.

What lies behind the increasing frequency of terrorist acts? No one seems to know.

THE ACTS appear to occur in rushes. This past March saw an ex-Nazi hold a factory in terror, a man with a grudge against his mortgage company wired a shotgun to the head of one of the company's employees, a man inspired by the television series of "Roots" held several hostages while demanding to be reunited with his son, an enraged black man also seized hostages, declaring he would not release them until all white persons left the planet and in the most gruesome act of terrorism, the Hanafi Moslems held the city of Washington at bay for several days.

Currently, in Europe, a group of South Moluccan terrorists are holding 55 persons hostage on a train stranded in the Dutch countryside.

The seizing of hostages for political ransom is not a new phenomenon in Europe. All the countries there have been subjected to the demand of terrorists.

WHAT IS even more unnerving than the performance of these acts is the manner in which the public views them.

A creeping complacency is spreading. We are beginning to view terrorism as an everyday occurrence.

It is appalling to hear someone say, "Oh, it's just another group of nuts trying to get some publicity." And that's it.

Why?

The hostages being held are human beings, but the prevailing attitude is one of, "It doesn't affect me, so why should I worry about it?"

This kind of attitude is reinforced every time we sit down in front of our television sets and watch our "heroes" shoot, stab, maim and kill other people. We watch wars being fought, we watch cold-blooded murders, we watch husbands beat their wives, parents beat their children and children kick their dogs and we call it "entertainment."
